

Über dieses Buch

Dies ist ein digitales Exemplar eines Buches, das seit Generationen in den Regalen der Bibliotheken aufbewahrt wurde, bevor es von Google im Rahmen eines Projekts, mit dem die Bücher dieser Welt online verfügbar gemacht werden sollen, sorgfältig gescannt wurde.

Das Buch hat das Urheberrecht überdauert und kann nun öffentlich zugänglich gemacht werden. Ein öffentlich zugängliches Buch ist ein Buch, das niemals Urheberrechten unterlag oder bei dem die Schutzfrist des Urheberrechts abgelaufen ist. Ob ein Buch öffentlich zugänglich ist, kann von Land zu Land unterschiedlich sein. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher sind unser Tor zur Vergangenheit und stellen ein geschichtliches, kulturelles und wissenschaftliches Vermögen dar, das häufig nur schwierig zu entdecken ist.

Gebrauchsspuren, Anmerkungen und andere Randbemerkungen, die im Originalband enthalten sind, finden sich auch in dieser Datei – eine Erinnerung an die lange Reise, die das Buch vom Verleger zu einer Bibliothek und weiter zu Ihnen hinter sich gebracht hat.

Nutzungsrichtlinien

Google ist stolz, mit Bibliotheken in partnerschaftlicher Zusammenarbeit öffentlich zugängliches Material zu digitalisieren und einer breiten Masse zugänglich zu machen. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher gehören der Öffentlichkeit, und wir sind nur ihre Hüter. Nichtsdestotrotz ist diese Arbeit kostspielig. Um diese Ressource weiterhin zur Verfügung stellen zu können, haben wir Schritte unternommen, um den Missbrauch durch kommerzielle Parteien zu verhindern. Dazu gehören technische Einschränkungen für automatisierte Abfragen.

Wir bitten Sie um Einhaltung folgender Richtlinien:

- + Nutzung der Dateien zu nichtkommerziellen Zwecken Wir haben Google Buchsuche für Endanwender konzipiert und möchten, dass Sie diese Dateien nur für persönliche, nichtkommerzielle Zwecke verwenden.
- + Keine automatisierten Abfragen Senden Sie keine automatisierten Abfragen irgendwelcher Art an das Google-System. Wenn Sie Recherchen über maschinelle Übersetzung, optische Zeichenerkennung oder andere Bereiche durchführen, in denen der Zugang zu Text in großen Mengen nützlich ist, wenden Sie sich bitte an uns. Wir fördern die Nutzung des öffentlich zugänglichen Materials für diese Zwecke und können Ihnen unter Umständen helfen.
- + Beibehaltung von Google-Markenelementen Das "Wasserzeichen" von Google, das Sie in jeder Datei finden, ist wichtig zur Information über dieses Projekt und hilft den Anwendern weiteres Material über Google Buchsuche zu finden. Bitte entfernen Sie das Wasserzeichen nicht.
- + Bewegen Sie sich innerhalb der Legalität Unabhängig von Ihrem Verwendungszweck müssen Sie sich Ihrer Verantwortung bewusst sein, sicherzustellen, dass Ihre Nutzung legal ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass ein Buch, das nach unserem Dafürhalten für Nutzer in den USA öffentlich zugänglich ist, auch für Nutzer in anderen Ländern öffentlich zugänglich ist. Ob ein Buch noch dem Urheberrecht unterliegt, ist von Land zu Land verschieden. Wir können keine Beratung leisten, ob eine bestimmte Nutzung eines bestimmten Buches gesetzlich zulässig ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass das Erscheinen eines Buchs in Google Buchsuche bedeutet, dass es in jeder Form und überall auf der Welt verwendet werden kann. Eine Urheberrechtsverletzung kann schwerwiegende Folgen haben.

Über Google Buchsuche

Das Ziel von Google besteht darin, die weltweiten Informationen zu organisieren und allgemein nutzbar und zugänglich zu machen. Google Buchsuche hilft Lesern dabei, die Bücher dieser Welt zu entdecken, und unterstützt Autoren und Verleger dabei, neue Zielgruppen zu erreichen. Den gesamten Buchtext können Sie im Internet unter http://books.google.com/durchsuchen.

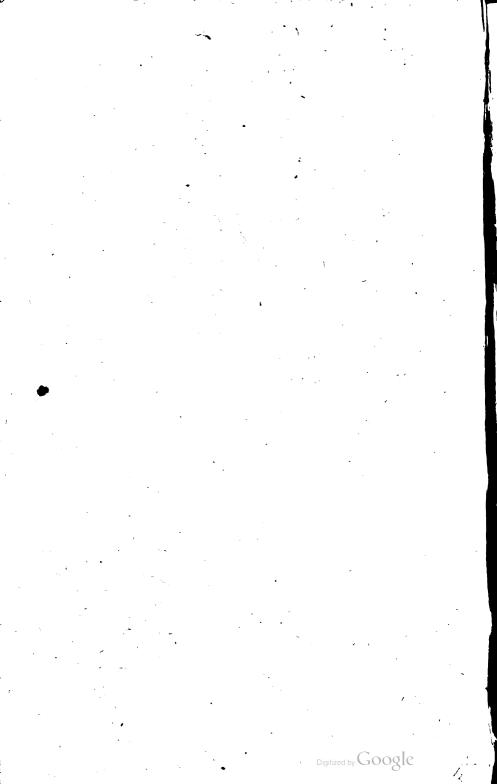

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google* books

https://books.google.com

4226. cc 17. Digitized by Google

DISSERTATION

MIRACLES;

DESIGNED TO SHEW,

That they are Arcuments of a Divine Interposition,

AND

Abfolute PROOFS of the Miffion and Dectrine of a PROPHET.

Believe me for the very Works fake. JOHN xiv. 11.

A NEW EDITION, CORRECTED.

BY HUGH FARMER.

EDINBURGH :

Printed for J. DICKSON, J. FAIRBAIRN,

and J. OGLE.

1798.

Digitized by Google

PREFACE.

THE Christian revelation well deferves the esteem of mankind, on account of its intrinsic excellence; nevertheles, the proper proof of its divine original is, that miraculous testimony which was borne to those who first published it to the world. But, unhappily for the interests of the Gospel, its most learned advocates have greatly impaired, if not destroyed, the force of this testimony, by afferting the power of invisible beings, of different and opposite characters, to work miracles.

This opinion (than which fcarce any has been more generally inculcated) has occafioned much perplexity to many fincere Christians. When they furvey the miracles of the Gospel, they can fcarce help feeling the force of the argument arising from them in favour of its divinity: but, when they recur to their speculative opinions concerning the power of evil spirits, their minds are in the fame fituation with that of the most learned of all the Jews*, when

a 2-

he

Digitized by Google

* Maimonides, de Fund. leg. c. 8. sect. 1. Compare the passage from Dr. Clarke, cited ch. 2. sect. 6. p. 84.

PREFACE.

iv -

he confessed "a sufficient, that all miracles may be " wrought by the power of magic or incantation."

What has ferved to perplex the friends of revelation, has emboldened others to reject it. From the earliest ages of Christianity, down to the present day, unbelievers have treated the argument from miracles (as it is commonly flated) not only as an improper means of conviction, but as an affront to their understandings. Celfus, (in a passage we shall have occafion to cite *,) not without an equal mixture of fcorn and indignation, upbraids Christians with their abfurdity, in making use of the fame works, to prove one perfon to be a divine messenger, and to difgrace another as a magician and impostor. And a late celebrated writer, when arguing against those who allow the devil a power of performing miracles, and who, (according to his conception,) after proving the doctrine by the miracle, are reduced to prove the miracle by the doctrine; afks and refolves the following queftion: "Now, what is to be done in this cafe? There " is but one step to be taken, to recur to reason, and " leave miracles to themfelves: better indeed had it " been never to have had recourfe to them, nor to " have perplexed good fenfe with fuch a number of " fubtle diffinctions +."

It may, perhaps, be faid, " That could deifts be " perfuaded of the truth of the Scripture miracles, " they would not deny their divinity." But the fame

Digitized by Google

* Ch. 2. fect. 6. p. 83.

+ Rouffeau, in his Emilius, V. 3. p. 113.

fame opinion concerning the miraculous power of wicked spirits, which furnishes them with an objection against the divinity of the miracles of Scripture, fupplies them with the ftrongest argument against their truth. For they cannot perfuade themfelves, that God, when he fees fit to give proofs of his own extraordinary interpofition, will chufe fuch as are deceitful or ambiguous. And whatever their own fentiments may be with respect to the power of evil beings to work miracles; yet, as long as they are taught to believe that the Scripture afcribes to them this power, they will think themfelves warranted by the Scripture itself to reject or difregard its miracles.

The more I reflect upon this fubject, the more fully am I convinced, that it is entirely owing to the natural impression which miracles make upon the human mind, and not to those speculative opinions which have been most commonly entertained concerning them, that Christianity has maintained its ground in the world. And to these natural impresfions we might fafely trust the cause of revelation: were they not liable to be effaced by the power of fuperstition, and the sophistry of science, fallely so called. In other inftances, as well as in this, the natural sense of mankind may be in some measure fubdued by the force of oppofite principles. And whenever this is the cafe, it becomes necessary to fhew that those principles are ill founded.

What is attempted in the following fheets, is, to refute those principles of demonism, which have done fo much difcredit to the argument drawn from miracles in favour of the Jewish and Christian revelations. Without

a 3

PREFACE.

vi

Without entering into an examination of the peculiar nature and circumstances of the Scripture miracles, I confider only the general question, Whether miracles are, in themselves, evidences of a divine interpofition; and confequently (when properly applied) certain proofs of the divine original of a fupernatural revelation? Nor is it merely the credit of revelation that is concerned in this question; but the honour alfo of the general administration of divine providence, and the common interests of piety and virtue. And one would imagine, that all men would with to fee the affirmative of this question fully proved: for what can contribute more to our happinefs, than the belief that the world is under the government of God alone; and that no created fpirits, much less fuch as oppose his benevolent and wife defigns, can difturb that course and order of things which he has established? With respect to the friends of revelation, there is this additional reafon to dispose them in favour of this principle, that they must allow, that (at least) it facilitates the proof of revelation, and reduces it within a narrow compass; leaving them only the eafy tafk of proving the truth of the miracles of the Gospel, in order to their fully establishing its divine original.

Notwithstanding many recommendations of this principle, I am sensible it must meet with opposition from the prejudices of mankind, which insensibly bias even upright enquirers after truth. Many are ready to acknowledge, that an opinion is not therefore false, because it contradicts received notions; and yet but few are duly sensible how exceeding difficult

Digitized by Google

it

PREFACE

it is to get rid of false opinions, early entertained, constantly inculcated, and stamped with the authority of those who are most respected for their learning and abilities. Habits have as great an influence over the judgments, as over the actions of mankind.

The fubject before us certainly deferves an impartial and attentive examination. And though the manner in which it is here handled may be liable to feveral objections; yet the author hopes for fome indulgence from those who are acquainted with the difficulties with which the fubject was embarraffed, and confider the compais necessary to be taken in treating it. One objection it may be proper here to obviate, viz. " that by maintaining, that miracles, " if they are not works peculiar to God, form no " conclusive proof of a divine revelation; I give an " advantage to infidelity." To perfons accuftomed to follow truth wherever it leads, fuch language will feem rather to require a rebuke, than to deferve an answer. It is not the language of probity, but of policy, which has ever discouraged all enquiries after truth, and still continues to stop its progress in the world. This language betrays an unworthy fulpicion of the Christian revelation, which, nobly confcious of the validity of its credentials, demands a rigorous examination, and must in the end be a gainer by it. If the tenets advanced in the following fheets are falfe, it is fit they should be detected; and if they are true, we may embrace them with fafety: because truth will be always found confistent with itself. It is not however the doctrine which we affert that gives advantage to infidelity, but that which we oppofe,

84

Digitized by Google

vн

PREFACE.

pole, viz. " the power of other beings befides God " to work miracles, even in oppofition to heaven." While this principle is maintained, and maintained upon the credit of thole very Scriptures whole authority it fubverts; unbelievers, if we may judge by the experience of near two thousand years, will always reject the evidence of miracles as inconclusive. If they are to be convinced, it must be done, I apprehend, in the method here attempted, by shewing them, that this principle is as contrary to the fense of revelation, as it is to the genuine dictates of reafon; and confequently that miracles, being appropriate to God, constitute a certain proof of a divine mission, and are the most proper means of confirming and propagating a new revelation.

I will only add, that it was never more neceffary to do juffice to revelation on this fubject, than in the prefent age; which is every day making fuch quick advances in the knowledge of nature. For hereby we are daily furnished with new proofs, that in the fystem of nature there is no combat of opposite powers; that all the parts of which that fystem is composed, though infinitely various, act by uniform laws, and confpire together in carrying on the same defign; and confequently that they are under the constant direction of One almighty Ruler. Will not the prejudices of unbelievers therefore be every day increasing, while men missing and the same teaching the contrary doctrine?

Digitized by Google

CON-

♥ni

CONTENTS.

CHAP. I.

Preliminary Confiderations, p. 1.

SECT. I.

The nature of miracles explained; and fhewn to confift in their contrariety to those general rules by which the visible world is governed, or to the common course of events in it, p. 1. This account cleared from objections, p. 3. Four conclusions from it, p. 12.

SECT. II.

Miracles not impoffible to the power of God, p. 14. Nor neceffarily repugnant to our ideas of his wildom and immutability, p. 18. Neither do they imply any inconfiftency in the divine conduct, or any defect or diffurbance of the laws of nature, p. 21.

SECT. III.

Of the different caufes to which miracles have been afcribed, p. 22. 1ft, Miracles unjuftly confidered by fome as the effects of the fecret powers of nature, ib. Eafily diffinguifhed from the wonders both of nature and art, p. 26. 2dly, The opinion of thofe, who afcribe miracles to fuperior created intelligences acting without a fpecial commiffion from God, ftated, p. 27. 3dly, An examination of the opinion of thofe who appropriate all real miracles to God, as works which are fuppofed to require the immediate exertion of divine omnipotence; while at the fame time they allow fuperior fpirits, both good and evil, a power of performing very great wonders, p. 28. and fuppofe the devil counterfeits true miracles, miracles, and deceives the fenfes of mankind, p. 30.—What is here proposed, is, to prove, that miracles can never be effected without a divine interposition, and are, in themselves, authentic evidences of a revelation from God, p. 31.

CHAP. II.

Arguments from Reafon, to prove, that Miracles are never performed without a Divine Interpolition, p. 33.

SECT. I.

The fame arguments, which prove the existence of superior created intelligences, do much more strongly conclude a gainst their acting out of their proper sphere, p. 34. 1. The argument from the gradation of being in our system, id. 2. The argument from the perfections of God, and the magnificence of the universe, p. 38. The objection from the spiritual and invisible nature of superior beings, answered, p. 39. A power of moving matter, not effential to all spirits, p. 41. As reason makes known to us only one almighty Being, who can certainly work miracles, it is most natural to refer these works to him, p. 43.

SECT. II.

No proper evidence of the truth of any miracles, but fuch as might have God for their author, p. 45. The fuppofition of the power of any created agents to work miracles in this lower world without a divine commiffion, contrary to our own perforal obfervation and experience, ib. Nor does it appear that hiftory has transmitted to us any miracles worthy of credit, but fuch as might fitly be afcribed to God, p. 46. Several general reafons for rejecting all miracles that couldnot have God for their author, p. 48. If superior beings never exert, it is unnatural to suppofe they posses, a miraculous power, p. 52. The objection, " that God may lay " created spirits under a general, but not under an universal " restraint," considered, p. 53.

SECT.

SECT. III.

- The laws of nature being the immediate ordinance or operation of God, the rule of his government, and effential to the order and happiness of the world; it is impossible that God should delegate to any of his creatures a power of working miracles, by which those divine establishments may be superfeded and controuled, p. 57.

SECT. IV.

The afcribing to any fuperior beings, befides God, and thole immediately commiffioned by him, the power of working miracles, deftroys' the evidence of the existence and providence of God, p. 63; is hurtful to true piety, p. 64; and a fruitful fource of idolatry and fuperstition, p. 65. Chriftians too nearly refemble the Pagans, who deified the principle of evil, p. 66.

SECT. V.

If miracles were performed in favour of falle doctrines; mankind would be exposed to frequent and unavoidable delusion, p. 69. Of the natural impression of miracles, when performed in attestation of a professed mission, p. 70. Whether miracles may accompany a falle doctrine, for the trial of mankind, p. 72. Whether, in this case, the nature of the doctrine would universally secure mankind from deception, p. 75. What consequences might be expected to follow from miracles wrought in support of idolatry, p. 76; or vice, p. 78. God will not subject mankind to necessary delusion, p. 80.

SECT. VI.

If miracles may be performed without a divine interpolition, and in fupport of fallehood; they cannot be, in themfelves, authentic credentials of a divine million, and criterions of touth, p. 81. Whether, in cafe of a conteft between two opposite parties working miracles for victory, the party that works the most and greatest miracles, is espoused by God, p. 83. CONTENTŠ.

p. 83. Whether, in cafe miracles prove only the interpolition of fome fuperior being, the doffrine will enable us to determine, who that being is, p. 87. The proper and immediate intention of miracles could not be anfwered, if they did not appear to be divine works, previous to our examination of the doftrine they atteft, p. 89. God must therefore have referved to himfelf the power of miracles, p. 90. Recapitulation, p. 91.

CHAP. III.

Arguments from Revelation, to prove, that Miracles are, in themfelves, certain Evidences of a Divine Interpolition, p. 94.

SECT. I.

The view which the Scripture gives us of angels, both good and evil, and of the fouls of departed men, inconfistent with their liberty of working miracles, p. 95.

I. Concerning angels in general, and good angels, ib.

11. Concerning fallen angels, and their state as described by St. Peter and St. Jude, p. 98. Their presidency over distinct regions of the world, cannot be proved from what occurs Dan. x. 13, 20. concerning Gabriel's being opposed by the princes of the kingdom of Persia, and his fighting the prince of Persia, p. 100. Nor can their power of changing the constitution of the air, be inferred from what is faid by St. Paul concerning "the prince of the power of the air," Ephel. ii. 2. p. 101.

III. Concerning the fouls of departed men, p. 105. They have no intercouffe with the material creation, at leaft not with this lower world, ib. The idea entertained of them by Christians, both in ancient and modern times, borrowed from the Pagans, p. 107. The miracles afcribed to departed faints, branded as imposfures by St. Paul, 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2. p. 109.

Digitized by Google

SECT.

xii

SECT. II.

The Scripture representation of the nature and claims of the Heathen gods, confidered, p. 111. 1.] The Heathens deified all the parts and powers of nature, p. 112. 2.] They believed the existence of demons, p. 115. The office of demons explained, ib. Demons, the more immediate objects of Pagan worthip, p. 116. An examination of the reasons commonly affigned to prove, that demons were spirits of a higher origin than the human race, ib. The more immediate objects of Pagan worship were human fouls, p. 121. This proved by the testimony of the Heathens, p. 122; of their hiftorians, p. 123; their poets, p. 125; their philosophers, p. 126; and by uncontroverted facts, p. 129. Why the doctrine of Euhemerus was centured by the Heathens, p. 130. That the Heathens worshipped dead men, farther argued from the authority of the Old Teftament writers, p. 132. The use of the word demon in the LXX translation, ib.; in Philo and Josephus, p. 133; and in the New Testament, p. 134. Remarks on the late controverfy concerning demons, p. 137. Demon, used in a badfense in Heathen writers, and in the New Testament, p. 138. The fpirits of wicked men were thought to become wicked demons, p. 140. This proved from the testimony of Heathens, ib.; and Jews, p. 141. The Christian Fathers maintain, that all the Heathen gods had been men and women, p. 142. At the fame time, they affirm them to be demons, p. 143. Their inconfistency in representing the Heathen gods as demons of a celeftial origin, p. 145. This notion borrowed from the Pagan philosophers, p. 148. Some of the Fathers taught, that demons were the fouls of departed men, p. 150; or that they fprung from angels and the daughters of men, p. 151. The fentiments of Tertullian and Origen concerning fouls and demons, p. 152, 154. The common people in the time of Chryfoftom believed that human fouls became demons, p. 155.

The Scripture condemns the worship of the objects of nature, p. 156; censures all the Heathen gods as utterly impotent and and fenfelefs, p. 157; and denies, that they ever infpired prophecies, or wrought miracles, or could do either good or evil, p. 160. The fyftem of Pagan idolatry was not fupported by powerful wicked fpirits, perfonating the Heathen gods, and, under their names, delivering prophecies, and working miracles, p. 162. The Scripture never reprefents the Heathens as worthipping devils, p. 167. The meaning of the feveral words rendered devils; of fchedim, in Deut. xxxii. 17. and Pf. cvi. 37. p. 168; of feirim, in Levit. xvii. 7. and 2 Chron. xi. 15. p. 168, 169; and of demons, in the New Teftament, p. 171.

SECT. III.

The character and pretentions of the magicians, diviners and forcerers of antiquity, examined, with the Scripture account of them. And the various pleas alleged by Christians, in fupport of the credit and efficacy of the antient magic, refuted, The magicians undertook to foretel future events, D. 173. and to effect many wonderful things, by their superior knowlege of the fecret powers of nature, ib.; yet were not mere naturalists and astrologers, p. 178. They are branded in Scripture as impoftors, who were incapable of fupporting their pretensions by any works or predictions beyond human power and skill, p. 183. The supernatural power of magic, cannot be inferred, either from the Scripture's defcribing diviners by their ufual appellations, or as perfons having a ' familiar fpirit,' and a ' fpirit of divination,' p. 186; nor from the laws of Moles against divination and witchcraft, p. 189; nor from the credit in which these arts were faid to be held, p. 192. Magic and divination held in general contempt in enlightened ages, ib.

SECT. IV.

Concerning the falle prophets, as fpoken of in Scripture, p. 197: in which are explained, I. The celebrated warning of Moles, "If there arife amongst you a prophet, or a "dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a fign or a wonder," &c. Deut. xiii. 1-5. ib. II. Christ's prophecy, "There "thall

Digitized by Google

tiv .

" fhall arife falle Chrifts, and falfe prophets, and fhall fhew " great figns and wonders," Mat. xxiv. 24. p. 206. III. Several paffages in the epiftles, relative to the falfe teachers in the apoftolic age, whether they rejected or corrupted Chriftianity, p. 213. IV. St. Paul's prophecy concerning the man of fin, " whofe coming is after the working of " Satan, with all power, and figns, and lying wonders," 2 Theff. ii. 9. p. 218. V. St. John's prediction concerning the perfon " who was to do great figns, and make fire " come down from heaven," Rev. xiii. 13, 14. p. 221. The predictions of falfe prophets not fupernatural, p. 224.

SECT. V.

The Scriptures reprefent the one true God as the fole creator and fovereign of the world, p. 226; and as governing it by fixed laws, p. 229. They appropriate all miracles to God, p. 230; and urge them as proofs of his fole Divinity, p. 232. The import of the word Jehovab, ib. The miracles of Mofes defigned to prove the God of Ifrael to be Jehovah, p. 236. The miracles of fucceeding prophets performed with the fame intention, p. 240. The controverfy between the antient prophets of God and idolaters, flated, p. 243.

SECT. VI.

The Scriptures uniformly reprefent all miracles as being, in themfelves, an abfolute demonstration of the divinity of the miffion and doctrine of the prophet at whole instance they were performed; and never direct us to regard their doctrines as a test of the miracles being the effect of a divine interposition, p. 249. The miracles of Moles and the antient prophets, ib. Those of Christ, p. 251; and his aposses, p. 262. Concerning the gifts bestowed upon the Christian converts, p. 268. An examination of the objection from Mat. xii. 26, 27. "If Satan cast out Satan, he is divided " against himfelf; how then shall his kingdom stand? And " if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your " children cast them out?" p. 269. The Pharifees did not associate the context of the affistance of demons, mons, p. 270. Nor did Christ refer them to his doctrine in order to determine the divinity of his works, p. 271. The main doctrines of the Jewish and Christian revelations, confirm the other proofs of God's being the author of miracles, p. 280.

CHAP. IV.

Shewing, that the Scriptures have not recorded any inftances of real Miracles performed by the Devil; in Anfwer to the Objections drawn from the Cafe of the Magicians in Egypt, from the Appearance of Samuel after his decease to Saul, and from our Saviour's Temptations in the wilderness, p. 282.

SECT. I.

The cafe of the magicians who opposed Moses, confidered, p. 283. The various accounts of this fubject given by the learned, p. 284. The prevailing opinion fince the time of St. Auftin, that the works of the magicians were genuine miracles, performed by the power of the devil, ib. It is proposed to shew, that the magicians did not perform works really supernatural, nor were affisted by any superior beings, p. 285. With this view, the following points are examined at large : I. The character and pretensions of the magicians, ib. II. The true intention of Pharaoh in fending for them, and the abfurdity of the intention commonly afcribed to him, p. 280. III. The motives which might induce the magicians to attempt an imitation of the works of Mofes, p. 206. IV. The acts done by Mofes, and the principles on which he acted, p. 298. His opinion of magic, ib.; and of the Heathen deities, ib.; his doctrine concerning Jehovah as fole Creator and Lord of the world, p. 299; the ufe he makes of his own miracles in general, p. 301; and of each individual miracle apart, p. 304; these feveral confiderations rendered it impossible for him to admit that real miracles were performed by the magicians, leaft of all fuch 29

xvi

as imply a creating power, p. 307. The plea, that Mofes worked more and greater miracles than the magicians, infufficient to eftablish his credit, ib. The confequences which would follow from the order of time, in which Moses and the magicians are supposed to have performed their respective miracles, p. 308. V. The language in which Moses describes the works of the magicians, p. 310. Three observations upon it, p. 311. VI. The nature of the several works done by the magicians, p. 314: their first attempt, p. 315; their second, p. 318; their third, p. 319; their fourth, p. 320. Why, in this last attempt, they could not produce a specious counterfeit of the work of Moses, p. 321. What they meant by faying, "This is the finger of God," p. 322. The centure passed upon them by St. Paul, p. 325.

SECT. II.

The cafe of Samuel's appearance to Saul at Endor, p. 326. I. That the forcerefs did not raife up Samuel, p. 327. II. Nor did fhe caufe the devil to appear before Saul in the likenefs of this prophet, p. 329. III. Whether the whole was the work of human imposture; the artful forcerefs making the credulous monarch believe that fhe faw an apparition, when the really faw none; at the fame time fo managing her voice, as to make it to be heard from the place where the pretended the ghoft was; and thus to caufe Saul to think he received his answer from Samuel, p. 330. IV. Whether God did not either raife Samuel, or prefent a likenefs or image of him before Saul, to denounce the divine judgment againft him for the crime he was at this time committing, in applying to a reputed forcerefs, p. 335.

Concerning our Saviour's temptations in the wildernefs, p. 349. Allowances should be made for the errors of Christians, with respect to the devil's power of performing miracles, ib.

Digitized by Google

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

- Shewing, that Miracles, confidered as divine interpolitions, are a certain Proof of the Divinity of the Miffion and Doctrine of a Prophet. The advantages and neceflity of this proof, in confirming and propagating a new revelation. Miracles useful in reviving and confirming the principles of natural religion, p. 352.
- Under what circumfrances, miracles prove the divinity of a prophet's miffion and doftrine, p. 352. Two extremes to be guarded againft; that of confidering miracles as proofs only of power, on the one hand, p. 355; and, on the other, that of reprefenting them as proofs of the universal and perpetual infpiration of the perform who performs them, p. 357.
- 1.] The proof from miracles of the divine committion and doctrine of a prophet, is in itfelf decifive and absolute, p. 361. 2.] This proof is natural, and agreeable to the common fense of mankind in all ages, p. 364. 3.] It is easy and compendious, p. 368. 4.] Miracles are a powerful method of conviction, p. 370. 5.] Yet not violent nor compulsive, p. 371. 6.] Miracles neceflary to attest a divine commisfion, and to confirm and propagate a new revelation, such especially as contradict men's prejudices and passions, p. 372. 7.] Miracles ferve to revive and confirm the principles of natural religion, and to recover men from the two opposite extremes of atheism and idolatry, p. 375. 8.] The evidence of miracles, whether of power, or knowledge, is the fittest to accompany a flanding revelation; p. 381. Conclusion.

---

Digitized by Google

DISSERTATION

MIRACLES.

CHAP. L.

PRELIMINARY CONSIDERATIONS.

BEFORE we enquire, whether miracles are the peculiar works of God, and in themfelves proper evidences of a divine interposition, and confequently of a supernatural revelation; it will be neceffary to prepare the way by several preliminary confiderations. I shall begin with

SECT. I.

Explaining the Nature of Miracles.

THAT the visible world is governed by flated general rules, commonly called the laws of nature; or that there is an order of causes and effects established in every part of the system of nature, fo far as it falls under our observation; is a point which none can controvert. Effects produced by the regular regular operation of the laws of nature, or that are conformable to its eftablished course, are called natural. Effects contrary to this settled constitution and course of things, I efteem miraculous. Were the constant motion of the planets to be suspended, or a dead man to return to life; each of these would be a miracle; because repugnant to those general rules, by which this world is governed at all other times.

Digitized by Google

All miracles pre-fuppofe an established fystem of nature, within the limits of which they operate, and with the order of which they difagree. The creation of the world at first, therefore, though an immediate effect of divine omnipotence, would not come under this denomination. It was different from, but not contrary to, that course of nature, which had not hitherto taken place. And miracles may be faid to difagree with, or to be contrary to, the general rules and order of the natural fystem, not only when they change the former qualities of any of the conftituent parts of nature, (as when water, for example, is converted into wine :) or when they controul their usual operation and effects, (as when fire, without lofing its properties, does not burn combustible materials; or a river is divided in its course, the water still preferving its gravity:) but also when they supersede (as they always do) the usual operation of natural causes. For effects produced in the pre-established fystem of nature, without the affiftance of natural caufes, are manifest variations from, or contradictions to, the order and ufual courfe of things in that fystem. That a man fhould be enabled to fpeak a new language, which he never learnt in a natural way, and that his body body should be supported without food; are events evidently contrary to the ordinary courfe of things, and to that constitution of divine providence, which renders mankind dependent upon their own fludy and application for the knowledge of languages, and upon food for fustenance. We do not affirm, that miracles do univerfally and neceffarily imply a proper fufpenfion of the laws of the natural world, fo as that they should cease to produce their usual effects: the human mind may receive new knowledge in a fupernatural manner, without any fuspension of its present powers. Nevertheles, the supernatural communication of new knowledge to the human mind, is contrary to the general rules by which the human fystem is governed, or to that connexion which God has established between our acquisition of knowledge, and the proper exercife of our rational faculties.

3

To this account of miracles it has been objected,

1/t; "That miracles may be performed, where " there is no difagreement with any law of nature, " nor any variation from its established course: be-" caufe many things which exceed the power of man, " may be performed by fuperior beings." This objection has been illustrated and supported in the following manner : " A fpirit may have a natural power " of lifting up a ftone from the earth; and therefore " if he does fo, there is no law of nature contra-" dicted, any more than when a man lifts it up. " Were a man to walk upon the water, upheld by " fome invisible power, the law of gravitation would " no more be violated or fuspended, than if he was " upheld by fome visible power. What departure is " there A 2

" there from the laws and confliction of the uni-" verfe, when a difeafe is cured by a fuperior being, " any more than when it is cured by the force of fome powerful medicine; unlefs there be a law of ature or conflictution of the univerfe forbidding the occasional interposition of fuperior beings in this lower world? a point which ought not to be taken for granted, and affumed into the definition of miracles."

In answer to this objection, we may observe, that it is built on a misapprehension of what I here intend by the laws of nature. For though the word, nature, may be fometimes used for the whole compais of existence, created and uncreated; (in which sense of the word, no effect can ever be produced contrary to the laws of nature, that is, to the natural powers of all orders of existence;) yet this is not the most common acceptation of the word, nor that in which it is here used. Neither do I apply this term to the conftitution of the universe, and comprehend under it the invisible worlds, and those superior beings that inhabit them. By the laws of nature, I here mean, those rules by which the visible world is statedly governed, or the ordinary course of events in it, as fixed and afcertained by observation and experience; and particularly the order of that fystem to which we belong *. Now according to the ulual course of events.

* Thus, for example, that there is a force imprefied upon all bodies whereby they mutually attract, or tend towards each other, according to the quantity of matter they contain, and in a certain events in this fystem, a ftone which lies upon the ground, will rest there, till it is removed by some corporeal force, superior to that by which it gravitates towards the earth: all bodies specifically heavier than water, will fink in it, when no bodily fub/tance interposes to prevent it: and the diseases of our animal frame will continue, till the constitution, either by its own efforts, or by the affistance of material causes, returns to its original state. And therefore there is a real transgression of these feveral laws of matter and motion, when a state of the affistance of matter and motion.

a certain proportion to their diffances: that every body perfeveres in the fame ftate, either of reft, or uniform rectilinear motion, except fo far as it is compelled to change that flate by fome foreign force : that the change of motion is ever proportioned to the moving force whereby it is effected, and in the direction of the right line wherein that force is imprefied; and that the actions of two bodies on one another are always mue tually equal, and directed contrary ways: these are laws of nature, or general rules observed by natural bodies in their actions on one another, and in all the changes which befal them in their natural state. It may be faid, that the general laws of nature denote only the phanomena or objects of nature. To me they feem to express fomewhat more, viz. that the phanomena are connected together in a certain order, and fucceed one another in an invariable train, according to fome general rules, fixed by divine wildom. Nor does it appear, that any part of the natural fystem, (not even the smallest particle of matter, any more than the vast body of the fun or earth.) is ever moved; but according to thefe stated rules. The more nature is studied, and the better it is understood; the more reason have we to believe, that its laws are firstly and inviojably observed.

5

T

fupported on the furface of the water *, without the application of any corporeal force; or when a difeafe is cured, without the affiftance of the fprings and powers belonging to the human frame, or the application of any fuitable medicine.

In affirming all miracles to be deviations from or contradictions to the laws and order established in all the parts of the creation, which fall under human cognizance; it is not supposed or taken for granted, that there is a law or constitution of the universe preventing the occafional interpolition of all superior beings in this visible world, for the purpose of working miracles. Whether there are any; and if any, what other beings there are in the universe, who have a power of interpoling for any fuch purpole; is left undetermined by our definition, and is the point which is to fall under future examination. All that our definition implies as a thing allowed, is, that, as far as our observation reaches, there is an established disposition and course of things, or that certain caufes uniformly produce certain effects, according to fixed laws or rules. Every contradiction to this conflitution of the natural fystem, and the correspondent course of events in it, I call a miracle, by whatever fpiritual fpiritual beings it is apprehended to be effected, whether created agents, or the Creator himfelf.

* If in this and the foregoing inftance the law of gravitation be not fufpended, but only overcome by the interposition of fome fpiritual agent: yet on this fupposition, a real miracle is performed; because the operation and effects of the law of gravitation are controuled, in a manner repugnant to the genereal rules by which the natural world is governed.

6

Those who have opposed this notion of miracles, have not attended to the obvious diffinction between the usual course of nature in this visible world, and the (supposed) natural powers of invisible agents : and they will not allow, that the former is changed, if the effect produced does not exceed the latter. But fuppofe an angel to be as able to carry a man through the air, as a man is to carry a child in his arms; neverthelefs the former would be contrary, and the latter conformable to those general laws or rules of motion observed by bodies in our fystem in their actions on one another. And if no effect can be faid to be repugnant to the courfe of nature, unlefs when it furpaffes the natural power of the agent; then, till the utmost power of the agent is known, it can never be determined whether the operation agrees with the course of nature or not. Nay, it would follow, from this principle, that the course of nature can never be changed: for fuch a change cannot be effected, but by an agent who has power equal to the work; and yet if the agent has power equal to the work, then the course of nature is not changed. On this principle, the course of nature cannot be changed by God himself, merely because he has a natural power of doing it. And yet who does not perceive, that his caufing the fun to ftand still for twenty-four hours though it lies within the compass of his omnipotence, would be a variation from the order of nature, or the common course of events in the natural world?

2dly; As fome will not allow, that the order of na-A 4 ture,

Digitized by Google

ture is contradicted, fo others deny, that any miracle is performed ; unlefs the action exceeds the utmost capacities of the agent. Accordingly they maintain *, that the fame action may be or not be miraculous, according to the different abilities of the performer. Were a man, fay they, to ftop the course of the heavenly bodies, which is above the reach of all the powers of his nature; this would be a miraculous operation : but were a fuperior being, who had power equal to fuch a work, to fuspend the motion of the heavenly bodies; this would be no miracle at all. But this opinion is liable to many of the fame difficulties with the other. For from hence will it not follow, that while the agent is unknown, it will be impofible to determine whether the operation is or is not miraculous? and likewife that God himfelf can never work miracles, because he is naturally able to work them? Nay, as, according to the former opinion, no law of nature can ever be superseded or controuled; so, according to the latter, no miracle can ever be performed : it being impoffible that any action should exceed the power of the real agent. Every effect must necessarily have an adequate cause. ' An effect, therefore, which is beyond the ability of the perfon who produces it, feems rather an abfurdity, than a miracle.

Should it be alledged, " that what the man him-" felf has no power of performing, he may do by " the affiftance of a fuperior being:" it would be eafy

* Dr. Chandler in particular, in his discourse of the nature and use of miracles, p. 17, maintains this opinion.

easy to reply, that this superior being is the only proper agent, the work being accomplished by his power alone. When we fpeak of a prophet as the performer of his miracles, nothing more is to be understood by this popular language, than that they take place agreeably to his declaration, and are defigned as a teftimony to his mission. He is not, in strictness of speech, the proper agent; the works are not done by him, but for him, by that invisible being who interpofes in his behalf. If the works did not exceed his own ability, they could be no attestation to his character, nor proofs of the interpolition of any fuperior being whatever. And the fame works would be equally miraculous, were they to be performed for any other purpose, than that of bearing testimony to a prophet, or even without his intervention. The refurrection of Christ, and that of those who came out of their graves at the fame time, though accomplished immediately by God; were as real miracles, as if they had been effected, as many others were, at the voice, or by the instrumentality of man. When miracles are performed at the instance or with the intervention of man; this circumstance ferves to point out the relation they bear to him, not to prove their being done by his power. The cafe mentioned above, and which is framed with a view to shew, that a miracle is an operation beyond the ability of the agent; feems very incapable of answering the purpose. To stop the course of the celestial bodies, is faid to be either fupernatural or not, according as the agent wants or poffeffes power equal to the work. But how could this (or any other) operation be performed by a power power unequal to it? It could be deemed miraculous on no other account, than its contrariety to the general courfe of nature. If it was performed at the prayer of a prophet; this would better ferve the purpofe of attefting his character, but would make no alteration in the nature of the work itfelf.

Digitized by Google

Most writers, in defining a miracle, feem to place it, not in the effect produced, but in the caule, or at least include the latter in their definition. A miraculous effect, like every common appearance, has its own proper specific nature, distinguishing it from all others of a different kind, feparate from the confideration of its caufe. And it is the operation or effect alone, which is affirmed to be contrary to that eftablished order and disposition of things, commonly called the courfe of nature : the real invisible agent by whom the effect is produced, though he acts out of his ufual fphere, exerts only his natural powers. The contrariety or conformity of the event itself to those laws by which this world is governed in the courfe of God's general providence, is that alone which denominates and conflitutes it a proper miracle or not. In this light, at leaft, the fubject appears to me; though, confidering the many different views taken of it by our ablest writers, it becomes me to propofe my fentiments upon it, with a just deference to the judgment of others *.

From

* The greater part of our lateft writers upon this fubject, define miracles, effects unufual, above human power, and manifesting the interposition of superior power. The following reasons prevented me from adopting this definition. 1. The term unps/ual

From the account here given of miracles, as operations contrary to the course of nature, the following conclusions are fairly deducible.

IA; No

ufual does not diffinguifh real miracles from many things which are not miraculous, fuch as the rare and uncommon appearances and productions of nature. 2. Nor does the calling a miracle, an effect above buman power, diftinguish it from all other effects equally above human power, produced by fuperior beings when acting within their ufual (phere, which for that reason cannot be miraculous. g. As this definition comprehends many things which are not miraculous, and to which no perfons apply the term; so it excludes many things which are allowed by all to be proper miracles. For there feems to be a difference between effects above human power, or which argue a higher degree of power; and effects which argue a power barely different from human, and in no manner fuperior to it. If a stone of a pound weight were fuspended in the air by an angel; all would admit this to be a miracle. But does this argue a greater power than is exerted, when a stone of the same weight, or one 50 times heavier, is fuspended by a man? To make a piece of iron to fwim, (a miracle afcribed to Elifha, 2 Kings vi. 6.) may not abfolutely require more power, than men exert every day in different methods, though it requires a power which does not belong to their nature. 4. According to this definition, beafts and birds may work miracles; for they do many things that are above the power of man. 5. This definition, instead of defcribing miracles by the nature of the works them felves, defcribes them by their author, and the degree of power supposed necessary to their performance. 6. Works which argue only a power more than human, can be no absolute proofs of a divine interpolition. 7. The last part of the definition, manifesting the interposition of superior power, is superfluous. It is only faying, effects above human power, must be produced by a power above it.

1/t; No event, however unu/ual or ftrange, however wonderful and unaccountable, can on these accounts alone be deemed miraculous, or contrary to nature ; fince it may be only the lefs known or the lefs common effect of its established laws and order. Comets, eclipfes, monstrous births, prodigies, the peculiar properties of particular bodies, and all the rare appearances of nature, however they may raife mens wonder, especially in the more ignorant ages of the world; are as regular effects of the laws of the natural world, as any of those with which we are most familiar. Under certain circumstances the monster is nature's genuine iffue; and in the fame circumstances there would always be the fame kind of production *. Where nature proceeds regularly in her courfe, without being fubject to any adventitious influence; there no miracle is performed.

2dly; In order to determine whether any operation be truly miraculous; it is not neceffary to inquire into the powers of fuperior created intelligences, and to fhew how far they do or do not extend. Such inquiries are wholly relative to the caufe or authar of miracles, and are of no ufe in fettling their proper fpecific nature, as deviations from or contradictions to the ordinary courfe of things. They do, indeed, neceffarily argue the interpolition of fome fpiritual agent, who is equal to fuch works; but their nature is the fame, whether that agent be God, or an angel, or an evil demon.

3dly; Before we can pronounce with certainty any effect

* Wollaston's Religion of Nature, p. 151. 7th ed. 8vo.

effect to be a true miracle, it is neceffary, (and nothing more is necessary, than) that the common course of nature be in fome degree first understood. In all those cafes in which we are ignorant of nature; it is * impossible to determine what is or is not a deviation from it, or to diffinguish between miracles and natu-Even a real miracle cannot be admitted ral effects. as fuch, or carry any conviction, to those who are not affured that the event is contradictory to the course of nature. On the other hand, in all cases in which the course of nature is understood; it will be eafy to determine whether any particular event be contrary or conformable to it, that is, whether it be a real miracle *. Miracles therefore are not, what fome represent them, appeals to our ignorance; they fuppose some antecedent knowledge of nature; without which, it is owned, no proper judgment can be formed concerning them; though with it, their reality may be fo apparent as to prevent all difpute or hefitation. Every fensible deviation from or contradiction to the known laws of nature, must be an evident and incontestible miracle.

4thly; Thofe who maintain, that both miracles and the courfe of nature are equally the operation of the divine power, have not fufficient ground to affert, " that what di/tingui/hes miracles from common e-" vents, is, that, with regard to the former, the in-" fluence of the divine power is obvious and fenfi-" ble." For in both cafes, the influence (that is, the actual exertion or exercise) of the divine power is fecret and invifible; and the evidence and effects of it may in both be alike fenfible and obvious. Nor is it neceffary that all miracles fhould answer this defcription, but such only as are designed for the conviction of mankind. The proper distinction, therefore, between the miraculous and ordinary effects of the divine power, confists in this, that, in the former cafe, God acts according to general laws; in the latter, he departs from them.

* This subject is pursued farther, ch. i. sec. iii,

SECT. II.

Miracles not impossible to the power of God, nor necessarily repugnant to our ideas of his wisdom and immutability. Neither do they imply any inconfistency in the divine conduct, or a defect or disturbance of the laws of nature.

I would at beft be a point of ufeless fpeculation, to inquire what purposes might be ferved by miracles, if from the general nature of all fuch works, there arises a full proof against their existence. And fuch proof would arise, in case they were, what some represent them, abfurd and impossible.

But to deny the poffibility of miracles, is to contradict a principle the most certain and evident of all the deductions of reason, allowed even by the adversaries of supernatural revelation; the being of a God. For if there exists an all-perfect mind, who made and governs the world, his omnipotence is a cause adequate to these marvellous operations. Infinite power, though it does not extend to contradictions, performs with ease ease whatever is possible in its nature. And so far are miraculous works from being impossible, that they are fimilar to what we fee actually effected in the common courfe of divine providence. I will endeavour to illustrate this by the following example; to cause water to be both water and wine at the fame time, is a manifest absurdity and contradiction; and therefore cannot be the object of any power: but to turn water into wine, or to change one liquid into another specifically different, is certainly within the reach of divine omnipotence; inafmuch as there is nothing contradictory in the idea of fuch transformation, and we observe continual changes of a like kind in many parts of the creation. Thus the moilture of the earth, by a common but admirable operation in the natural world, is converted into the juice of the grape, and numberless other juices, differing in kind from each other. according to the different nature of the plant or tree which imbibes it.

This obfervation might be extended farther, and applied to other inftances. Revelation is itfelf a miracle; but wherefore fhould it be thought impoffible with God? To his infpiration we owe our underftandings, with all their powers; from him we derive the noble faculty of fpeech, by which we communicate our ideas to each other: and has the father of our fpirits no accefs to them, no ability of imparting immediately and directly the knowledge of his will, and of affording fufficient evidence of his own extraordinary prefence and operation? Is there any thing in this more inexplicable, than in the common action of mind on body, or of body on mind? Will any affert, affert, that the almighty author of our frame is unable to repair the diforders of it? that he, who with fuch exquifite skill formed the seeing eye and the hearing ear, cannot reftore fight to the blind and hearing to the deaf? or that it is impossible for bim to raise the dead, who every year renews the face of nature, and revives the feed fown in the earth, and every day awakens mankind from the death of fleep to new life. in a manner as incomprehensible by us as the greatest miracle? He gave being to every living thing, to innumerable kinds of animals, and to a great diverfity of rational creatures; continually does he call into existence ten thousand new individuals: and is a fecond gift of life more difficult than the first? The analogy between miracles, and the common operations of God in the fettled course of nature, is a convincing demonstration of the possibility of the former.

Nothing can lead men to controvert a point fo obvious as this, but their not confidering, that the courfe of nature, which denotes only the flated laws by which the world is governed, is certainly the voluntary appointment of God, if not the immediate operation of his power. For if it be admitted, that nature is the operation or conflictution of God; it cannot be denied, that the power exerted in producing natural, may alfo produce preternatural effects; there being no other difference between them than this, that in the former cafe, the operations are regular, uniform, and conflant; in the latter, occafional, uncommon, and out of the ordinary tract of God's administration. Upon what grounds can it be

0.0

be concluded, that God is limited to a fettled courfe of acting, and to the prefent laws of nature? Is he not a free agent? Did he not act without the intervention of natural caufes, when he created the world at first, and settled the present constitution and course of things? It must folely depend on the will of the Deity, in what manner he shall exercise his own power; whether in continuing or controuling the course of nature, which is his own appointment; that is, whether he shall work miracles or not. Thus, for example, it is owing either to his original law, or immediate agency, that the planets move round a centre, and keep in their respective orbits : but the fame omnipotent hand which guides them in their prefent courfe, could eafily arreft them, or give them a new direction. To deny this, is to deny that God is at liberty to act as he fees fit, that he has any power over his own creation, and laws which derive all their authority from his fovereign will. The possibility of miracles, therefore, cannot reasonably be disputed by thofe, who believe the existence of the all-perfect Divinity, the great Author and Lord of nature. And this is a principle which ought to be admitted, before we engage in inquiries into the truth of any fuppofed discoveries of his will. For if there be no God, it is obvious to all, there can be no divine revelation *. R As * Miracles, indeed, which are the evidences of a fupernatural revelation, may be useful to convince men of the existence and perfections of the true God. Nevertheles, we find St. Paul, with perfect propriety, first instructing idolaters in this fundamental point, before he opened to them the peculiar doctrines of the Gospel. Acts xiv. 15. xvii. 22-31.

As miracles are not impossible to the power of God, fo neither are they necessarily repugnant to our ideas of his wi/dom and immutability. Frequent miraculous interpolitions might, indeed, argue a defect in those general laws by which the world is governed; to the regular execution of which laws, we owe our ideas of order and harmony, our rational expectations of fuccefs in all our undertakings, and our strongest convictions of wife council in the frame and government of the universe *. And confequently, it must appear highly improbable, that variations from those laws should take place, unless upon fome special and urgent occasions. Yet whoever reflects on the boundless extent and duration of the divine government, will eafily perceive, that nothing can be more abfurd as well as arrogant, than for a man, a creature whole faculties are fo limited, and who is but of yesterday, to prefume to determine, that no fit occasion for extraordinary interpofals can ever occur in that administration, the plan of which transcends his compre-By what principles of reason can it be dehenfion. monstrated, that he who reigns from eternity to eternity, never formed any defigns, except fuch as may be accomplished by the present establishment and ftructure of the universe? In the natural world new phænomena have been observed; new luminaries in the heavens have fuddenly fhone out, and as fuddenly vanished. And notwithstanding the great appearing regularity, with which the heavenly bodies perform their revolutions; yet those which belong to our fyftem tem are subject to such diforders, as may in a succesfion of ages require redrefs from the immediate hand of its creator *. And if the natural world may admit or demand extraordinary exertions of the divine power; much more may the moral; becaufe more liable to diforder, and at the fame time capable of the most divine improvements. May not God then interpofe in an extraordinary manner, to atteft a divine miffion, and communicate fome important instruction to his rational creatures, which they could not gather from the common operations of his providence; or to raife them to a Jublimer pitch of piety and virtue, than they could otherwife attain? If they are frail and liable to fall into fin, and are, either as a check upon the exorbitance of paffion, or on other accounts, wifely and justly subjected to all the miseries of a mortal state; may not the divine Being erect a new dispenfation to reform them from wickedness, to redeem them from death, and to advance them to a nobler state of existence? Such occasional interpositions might be farther ferviceable, by obviating the inconveniences of governing by fixed and general laws. For extraordinary interpolitions of the divine omnipotence in controuling the course of nature, befides anfwering B 2 * "While comets move in very excentric orbs in all man-"ner of pofitions, blind fate could never make all the planets move one and the fame way in orbs concentric; fome inconfiderable irregularities excepted, which may have arifen from the mutual actions of comets and planets upon one another; and which will be apt to increase till this fystem wants a re*formation*." Sir If. Newton's Opt. p. 378. 4th edit.

* This argument is farther illustrated below, ch. ii. fest. iii.

19

answering the ends to which they are more immediately directed, are well adapted to banish from the world the notions of necessity and fate, (which owe their rife to the uniformity and established order of the divine administration;) to awaken intelligent beings to a fenfe of their duty and dependence; and to give them a new conviction, and a deeper imprefion of God's governing power and justice. And if in fuch instances, and for fuch valuable purposes as these, (and there may be many others of a similar kind far beyond the reach of our faculties,) the Deity fhould diversify his operations; would not such operations difplay, rather than obscure, his wildom, benevolence, and other attributes? It would be difficult to prove, that God may not, in certain circumstances, have greater reasons for varying from his stated rules of acting, than for adhering to them. And whenever this is the cafe, and the end propofed is proportionable to the means of accomplishing it : the miracles are worthy of a divine interpofition.

With regard to the immutability of God in particular; that cannot be reproached or impeached on account of occafional interpolitions; fince they might be defigned from the beginning, upon the forefight of a juft occafion for them; and, inftead of arguing any change in the Almighty, be only the execution, at the fore-appointed fealon, of his eternal and immutable councils. Nor is it by purfuing invariably the fame methods of providence, but by conftantly adapting them to every different occafion, that God difplays his unalterable and impartial rectitude. It will not therefore follow from the fuppofition of God's miraculoufly miraculoufly interposing his power in fome circumfances, that he must necessitarily do it in all others, however different; because in the one case they may be expedient or necessary to answer the wise designs of providence, and not fo in the other.

Nor do miracles imply any inconfistency in the divine conduct, or any defect or diffurbance of the laws of nature. When the Deity occafionally controuls or fuperfedes them, he does not hereby contradict or defeat his intention in their first establishment : he propofes a defign different from it, but not inconfiltent with it. The laws of nature, being the laws of God, are certainly perfect, that is, perfectly adapted to anfwer all the uses for which they are defigned : but miracles derogate not from this perfection; because they aim at an end which the laws of nature were not intended to answer, and indeed could not possibly anfwer,-the marking a fpecial divine interpolition, and authorizing the million of him at whole inftance they are performed. Nor do occasional interpolitions of the divine power diffurb the order of nature in the common courfe of things. The operation of nature may be controuled in particular instances, without affecting the general fystem. Not'to plead, that some miracles feem only to fuperfede the operation of natural caufes, without controuling it; or to produce new effects without the affiftance of nature, but without interrupting it in its ufual courfe.

There is nothing then in the general idea of miracles, confidered as variations from the common courfe of nature, to furnish a certain universal proof against their existence; and there is a power superior to nature.

B 3

ture, who is ever able, and who in certain circumflances may fee ample reason, to over-rule what he at first established.

SECT. III.

Of the different causes to which miracles have been ascribed. The point undertaken to be proved, is, that miracles are never effected without a divine interposition.

A S fome have afferted the impoffibility of miracles, even to the power of God; others, on the contrary, have reprefented them as works which may be performed without any difficulty, either by a fkilful application of the fecret powers of nature; or by the affiftance of invisible beings, who may be at liberty to produce fuch effects without the immediate order of the Lord of nature. While there are fome who allowing their poffibility, yet confider them as performable by God alone, or as the works of infinite power.

I. That miracles are not the effects of the hidden properties of matter, the laws of motion, and the art of man; or in other words, that they are not owing to a fuperior knowledge and fkilful application of the fecret powers of nature; a few words will be fufficient to evince. I readily grant, what fome fo earneftly contend for, viz. " that we are not ac-" quainted with all the powers of nature; that many " ftrange properties of matter are now difcovered, " which were not formerly known; and therefore " that

23

" that there may be others equally furprizing, " yet undifcovered; that fome perfons having a " greater knowledge of these properties than others, " may, by a dextrous application of natural caufes " only, perform fuch things as would amaze igno-" rant spectators, and be by them too hastily mis-" taken for real miracles; and that, fince we cannot " univerfally determine the bounds of another's know-" ledge, it is impossible to afcertain the limits of that " power which in fome degree increases with his " knowledge." All this may be fafely admitted; for whatever men may be able to do with the affiltance of natural causes, it is certain that they can do nothing without that affiftance; and confequently cannot work miracles, which supersede the operation of natural caufes *. Befides, though we do not know all the laws of nature, yet we are acquainted with many of them. It has been observed already +, that in order to determine what operations are miraculous, an antecedent knowledge of nature is requifite. And it is a just inference from hence, nor are we under any concern to deny it, that, inafmuch as our knowledge of nature is partial, and we cannot univerfally determine how far its powers may extend; it may be equally impossible for us to determine universally, what operations are miraculous. But, on the other hand, our ignorance of nature is not total; the common course of it is in very many instances perfectly understood by all, by the illiterate as well as the philosopher; their own observation and experience im-

B4

* Sect. i. p. 2,

Digitized by Google

parting

parting to them very clear and fatisfactory infiruction concerning it; fuch as is most fully confirmed by the observation and united testimony of others, in the feveral ages of the world. In this knowledge of the laws of nature, all our reasonings, both in the sciences and in the conduct of human life, and all our ideas, are founded. Constant, never-failing experience farther instructs mankind in the uniformity and constancy of the laws of nature: it informs us, that although men may discover new properties of matter, and find that natural causes under a skilful direction are capable of producing very wonderful effects; yet that they cannot subvert, controul, or sus fus any of the established laws of nature *. No change in these fixed

* Mr. Rouffeau, who has lately revived the objection to miracles we are here confidering, affirms, " that it might be " in the power of one unknown law in certain cafes to change " the effects of fuch as were known." But what reason can this celebrated writer affign in support of this affertion ? Is it agreeable to our ideas of the divine wifdom, to fuppofe, that there is a perfect contradiction between the different parts of the fame fystem; that, for example, the operation of the known laws which regulate the motions of the heavenly bodies, may be defeated hereafter by fome other law yet unknown? Do the new discoveries which are daily making in the history and operations of nature, give any ground for fuch a fuspicion ? And even supposing that by the discovery of some law yet unknown, the effects of those already known might be defeated; this could not affect the credit of evident miracles, works feen and known to superfede the operation of all natural causes, and performed without their instrumentality. Were we to allow Mr. Rouffeau, that by a farther acquaintance with the powers of nature, men may hereafter be able to raife the dead; it would fill fixed rules of the divine government, can be effected by human power; notwithftanding, in certain other respects, human power may increase in proportion to our knowledge. From hence it will follow, that miracles, which are effects repugnant to the fettled laws and course of nature, cannot possibly be produced by natural causes, though under the most skilful direction; nor be otherwise accounted for, than by allowing the interposition of some being superior to nature, and capable of controuling its established order. And in all cases in which the laws established in the natural world are understood, and the effects produced are contradictory to them; we may conclude, that those effects are supernatural. In such cases, the knowledge of ftill be a real and evident miracle to raife the dead, without the use and affistance of those powers of nature. It has been faid, " That what, in one age, has been deemed a miracle, " has been found in another, more enlightened by philosophy, " to be produced by the powers of nature." This is not true with respect to the miracles of Scripture. There is not one fact there reprefented as miraculous, which does not ftill appear to v be fuch, notwithstanding all our improvements in natural knowledge. And how will the adversaries of revelation account for The Greek and Roman historians relate as prodithis fact? gies many events now known to be perfectly natural: while the writers of the Old and New Testament, who relate a greater number and variety of miracles, have not mentioned one, but what appears to furpals the powers of nature now, as much as it did formerly. I only add, that if the Scripture miracles are eafily diffinguished from natural events; it is of no moment to inquire, how far ignorance or inconfideration may lead men in other cases to miltake the wonders of nature for real miracles.

25

of the miracle is as eafy and certain as that of the laws. To heal all forts of difeafes, even the most inveterate, in an inftant, and without the use of natural remedies; to perform these cures in numberless inftances, without ever failing in any one, and upon perfons abfent as well as present; all men must acknowledge, that these things far furpass the bounds of human power. An uniform, unvaried experience convinces us, that they do not happen according to the settled constitution of nature, and that a bare volition of the human mind cannot in any degree contribute towards their accomplishment. Nor indeed did any man, in any age or country of the world, ever lay claim to a natural and inherent power of performing them.

Real and inconteftible miracles are eafily diffinguifhed from the artifices of imposture, and from curious experiments in natural philosophy; which, however unaccountable they may appear to the ignorant, can never be pronounced by them to be miraculous; becaufe they do not know them to be deviations from the course of nature. Nay, from the vifible natural means used in producing them, they have just reason to believe, that they are the effects of the powers of nature. For these reasons, the motions of a crucifix, the pretended liquefaction of blood, cures gradually effected in the use of natural remedies, but afcribed to the interceffion of faints, and the like juggles of popery, ought not to pais for miracles, even with those who cannot detect their imposture: nor should the skill of an Archimedes in raifing an immense weight, with the affistance of a machine which himfelf alone underftood, be judged fupernatural, fupernatural, how furprizing foever the effects of it might appear to one ignorant in mechanics: in this laft cafe, the visible application of mechanical powers; and in the former, the ftrong fuspicion of fraud arifing from the circumstances of the facts, and the covered manner of performing them; and in both cafes an absolute ignorance, at least, whether the effects might not be produced by natural causes, should prevent any from pronouncing them miraculous: a fentence which should be always founded on such a clear knowledge of nature, as enables us to determine with certainty, that the effect in question is a contradiction to its established course.

II. There are many who admit, that real miracles exceed the utmost power of natural causes and of mankind, who nevertheless do not ascribe them to God as their author.

" There are or may be in the univerfe," it is alledged, " invisible agents, placed in a higher order " than men, and endowed with fuperior abilities, " fuch as are equal to the greatest wonders; and "God may not lee fit to restrain them from exer-" cifing those abilities. Miracles, therefore, are " proofs only of the interpolition of fome superior " beings, not of God more than any other." In this manner unbelievers argue, in order to discredit the evidence of the Jewish and Christian revelations. " Were we to allow," fay they, " the reality of the " miracles to which those revelations appeal; this " alone would not establish their divine original; " because the works might be performed by other " powers lower than the divine." Nor is this the language.

27

language only of the avowed adversaries of all supernatural revelation, but even of very many of its fincere and zealous advocates, not excepting those most diffinguished by their learning and abilities, whose high reputation is fufficient to procure a general deference to all their opinions. Dr. Clarke * in particular affirms, " that it is by no means poffible for us " to determine what degrees of power God may rea-" fonably be fuppofed to have communicated to cre-" ated beings, to fubordinate intelligences, to good " or evil angels." And " that (unlefs we knew the " limit of communicable and incommunicable power) we " can hardly affirm with any certainty, that any par-" ticular effect, how great or miraculous foever it <sup>se</sup> may feem to us, is beyond the power of all created " beings in the universe to have produced." Without any defire to detract from the just merit of those great writers; who affert the power of fuperior beings, both good and evil, to work miracles; we shall freely and candidly examine the doctrine they advance; than which none appears to me more groundless, or more dangerous. But before we enter on this examination, it will be proper to obferve,

III. That those advocates of the Christian revelation who reject this account of miracles, have generally embraced another as hard to be maintained. They allow, that spirits, both good and evil, by " the " greater extent of their intellectual abilities, may " discover to men a great many fecrets; and that " their subtlety, agility, invisibility, and mighty force, " may

* V. ii. p. 697. fol. ed.

" may enable them to do most aftonifhing things, and " enable them also to affist men in performing many " great and marvellous works, fuch as are far beyond " the reach of human capacities: while at the same " time they maintain, that a real miracle cannot be " performed by any power which is not strictly infi-" nite, or otherwise than by the immediate exertion " of divine omnipotence."

Though this fcheme be defigned to fave the credit of real miracles, yet it can never answer this end, till the abettors of it enable us to diffinguish between the great and marvellous works which created fpirits may perform, and those which are peculiar to the Almighty. What purpofe can it ferve to call them by different names, while we are left in ignorance concerning their respective specific natures, and are liable to mistake the one for the other? When the learned bishop Fleetwood allows, " that spirits may " perform most strange and astonishing things, may " convey men through the air, or throw a mountain two " miles at a cast; because their natural powers may " fuffice for fuch purpofes *:" in what, befides words, does he differ from those who allow them the ability of performing real miracles? If he will not call any effect a true miracle, which might be produced by the natural powers of created intelligences; we can never determine what is truly miraculous, without firft knowing knowing the extent of the abilities of all created agents*. If they can remove a mountain; who shall fay, that they cannot remove the earth from its orbit? And if they can go fo far; why may they not remove the fun from its centre? It can never be affirmed concerning this (nor perhaps concerning any other) miraculous effect, that it neceffarily argues the highest possible degrees, or a strict infinity of power; such as cannot be exceeded. Much less can it be proved, that no invisible power which is not infinite, could support a human body on the water, or raise it into the air; which nevertheless are real and evident miracles, because contrary to the known • and usual course of nature.

* See p. 99, 100, 108, 109, 113, 114, of his moft ingenious Effay upon Miracles; to which the public is indebted for many excellent reflections upon this fubject; notwithstanding the dangerous conceffions which he has here made to his adverfaries.

" But evil (pirits," it is faid, " have not only the " power of working the like wonders, which good " fpirits do, but alfo another, which good fpirits will " never make use of; that is, by delusion and deceit " to imitate those true miracles, which none but God " himfelf can really effect." " The devil," it is faid, " " can deceive the fenfes of mankind, or place falfe " appearances before them, fo as to make them be-" lieve, fuch works are really performed as exceed " the power of all created agents." Those who hold this language do not duly confider, that fuch a deception of the human fenses would be itself a miracle; a miracle multiplied according to the number and different organs of the spectators; and which must have the fame effect upon them, as if the work, however miraculous, was truly and really performed. For

* Contrary to what is proved, fect. i. p. 12.

For how could they diftinguish, when an outward miracle is performed, and when it is that their own fight only is altered? Could they forbear doubting equally concerning all miracles, nay, concerning all the objects of fense, if they once firmly believed that their fenses, the only judges of them, were liable to be thus deceived? If the delusion of Satan confists, not in affecting the organs of fight, but in placing false appearances before them, fuch as are perfect imitations of divine miracles; this is liable to the very fame objections as the former. To be able to make things appear what they are not, and to impose upon the spectrum beyond their capacity of detecting the cheat, would be equivalent to a power of performing the greatest miracles.

It will now, perhaps, be inquired,-" If miracles " are neither the effects of natural causes; nor of " fuperior created intelligences, acting from them-" felves alone; and if it cannot be proved, that they " do univerfally and neceffarily require the exertion " of infinite power; to what cause are they to be " afcribed ?" I answer, they are always to be afcribed to a divine interpolition : by which I mean, that they are never wrought, but either immediately by God himfelf, or by fuch other beings as he commillions and empowers to perform them. Miracles may not require a degree of power abfolutely incommunicable to any created agent; and yet God may never actually communicate a miraculous power to any creature, or do it only where he directly authorizes its use. Now, whether God works the miracles himfelf alone, or whether he enables and commissions others others to work them; there is equally a divine interpofition. And in either cafe every purpofe of religion will be fecured: for whatever God authorizes and empowers another to do, is, in effect, done by God; and is as manifeftly a declaration of his will, as what he does immediately himfelf. He can no more authorize another to act, than he can himfelf act, in oppofition to his own nature, or in confirmation of impofture.

The point, then, which I shall undertake to establish, is this, " that miracles are the peculiar works " of God, or such as can never be effected without " a divine interposition," in the sense of the phrase already explained. This point we shall endeavour to establish both by reason and revelation. And should we succeed in this attempt, there will then be no difficulty in shewing, that miracles are, in themselves, certain proofs of the divinity of the mission and doctrine of the performer, and the most effectual methods of recommending him to the regard of mankind.

Digitized by Google

СНАР.

Proofs from Reafon, that Miracles, &c.

CHAP. II.

ARGUMENTS FROM REASON, TO PROVE THAT MI-RACLES ARE NEVER EFFECTED WITHOUT A DI-VINE INTERPOSITION.

M IRACLES, confidered as means of conviction, or as proofs of an extraordinary divine revelation, pre-fuppofe an ability of judging, whether God be the author of them, and they can be fitly regarded as his immediate declaration and teftimony in favour of their performer. The appeal in this cafe is plainly made to natural reafon; which muft firft be fatisfied with the evidence of any fupernatural revelation, before we acknowledge its authority, or fubmit to any of its decifions. And, therefore, before we examine the fenfe of the Jewifh and Chriftian revelations, with regard to the authority of miracles; we will confider what may be advanced from REASON, to prove that they can never be performed without the immediate interpofition of God.

We shall begin with examining the idea which reason teaches us to form of superior created intelligences: and in the next place, endeavour to shew, that the supposition of their power to work miracles is contrary to fact and experience: and lastly, point out some of the numerous absurdities, which would follow from their possessing a miraculous power.

С

SECT,

Proofs from Reason, that Miracles

SECT. I.

The fame arguments which prove the existence of superior created intelligences, do much more strongly conclude against their acting out of their proper sphere. The objection from their spiritual and invisible nature, answered.

W E are far from denying, that there are in the universe beings of a higher order than mankind, fuch as furpass us far both in natural and moral excellencies. All that we here undertake to shew, is, that reason is fo far from clearly informing us of the power of any superior beings, besides God, to work miracles; that the best arguments it can employ, to prove the existence of creatures of a higher order than man, do much more more strongly prove, that they can act only within a certain limited sphere. Those arguments are chiefly the two following.

1/t; From the diversity of creatures, and the gradual ascent from the lowest to the highest order of existence, observable here on earth; it has been inferred, that the scale of beings is continued upwards above man, and that there are numberless species of creatures superior to him, as we know there are of fuch as are inferior to him. " Is it not very un-" likely," we are asked, " that the gradation of be-" ing should stop just at man, the lowest order of " reasonable creatures? Is the immense space be-" tween man and the Deity quite empty, at the same " time that there is not the least chasm between man " and " and nothing ?" In answer to this reasoning *, I observe,

First, That it has not, perhaps, all that force in it, which its having been uncontroverted might lead us to fuppofe. We may allow, indeed, that the infinite number of living beings with which the earth is stocked, affords ground to conclude, that the other regions of the universe are equally furnished with inhabitants, adapted to their respective fituations. We may allow farther, that the gradation of being from lower to higher, which we observe in our system, furnifhes a proof, that the like gradation obtains in other fystems, and that their inhabitants differ from one another in degrees of excellence, and rife one above another in beautiful order. But whether they rife above us in perfection, the argument from analogy alone, as I apprehend, cannot determine. For that only enables us to judge, by God's manner of acting in one cafe, how he will act in another; and of what we do not fee and know of his ways, by what we do. But all that we observe in the fystem to which we belong, is an innumerable variety, and a gradation of beings. By the rule of analogy therefore fome fimilar economy may take place in other fystems, and they C 2

* It is hardly neceffary to take notice of the great impropriety there would be in fuppofing, that the chaim between man and his maker can poffibly be filled up. Were the chain of intelligence continued upwards from man, through as many orders of created beings as you can imagine; yet the uppermost link of this chain would be at an infinite diffance from the throne of God.

Proofs from Reafon, that Miracles

36

they may contain numberless orders of creatures rifing one above another till we come to the highest of them *. Beyond this, the argument from analogy will not carry us, fupposing it to carry us fo far +.

Secondly, Let us however fuppofe, that the fcale of beings in our planet is a conclusive proof, not only of a like gradation of being elfewhere, but alfo of there

* This may likewife ferve as an answer to another objection. From the close connexion between the different orders of beings in our fystem, and their mutual dependence ; it has been inferred by fome, that we may be equally related to and dependent upon the inhabitants of fome other fystem. All that the argument from analogy proves, is, that in each fystem of the universe, the different orders of creatures are or may be dependent on each other : but it does not prove, that the inhabitants of one fystem have a dependence on those of another : for of this we have no example. Befides, if the argument from analogy proved a mutual dependence between the inhabitants of different fystems; it would conclude as strongly in favour of the dependence of the inhabitants of other fystems upon us, as of our dependence upon them. There may be a relation between all those numberless worlds, and fystems of worlds, of which the universe is composed, as between various parts of one flupendous whole: but the point that still wants to be proved, is, that the inhabitants of other fystems and worlds have more power over us, than we have over them,

+ Those who have so often made use of the argument from analogy on the point in question, will perhaps have a less opinion of its force, if they confider farther, that in another view it militates against their own principles: for were this argument conclusive, it would prove, that inasmuch as our system is inhabited by corporeal intelligent creatures, other systems are so likewise; and thus lead them to deny a world of fpirius.

argue a divine Interpolition.

there being in the universe creatures as much superior to man, as man is to the meanest reptile: still the fame kind of reasoning which proves there are such beings, proves at the fame time, that they have a certain limited fphere of action appointed them by God. For how various foever the powers of different fpecies of creatures here on earth may be; they are all under particular laws, and have bounds circumfcribed to their activity, which they are not able to tranfgrefs. The rule of analogy teaches us to conclude the fame concerning all other beings. If we may judge of the conduct of Providence in unknown inftances, by those which fall under our obfervation; "HE, who has fet " bounds to the fea, which it cannot pafs, and fays " to its proud waves, Hitherto shall ye come, but no " farther *," has bounded the power, and fixed the state, of all the creatures which he hath made, not excepting those of the noblest order. And therefore whatever their natural powers may be, and however freely they may be allowed to use them; they are limited and determined to fuch purposes as God has appointed, and cannot possibly be extended beyond the fphere affigned them by the Creator. And yet no fooner is it proved, (or thought to be fo) that probably there are, in fome portion of the univerfe, beings fuperior to man; than it feems to be taken for granted, that they have the liberty of an unbounded range over the whole creation, that their influence extends over this earthly globe in particular, and that C 3 they * Job xxxviii. 11. Jerem. v. 22.

Digitized by Google

37

Proofs from Reason, that Miracles

they ftand in the fame relation to man, as man himfelf does to inferior creatures. But though there be a strict connexion between the different orders of creatures on this earth, who all belong to the fame fystem; yet none of them have any poffible communication from this lower world with the inhabitants of different fystems; none of them are able to traverse the univerfe, or to pass the bounds of their proper dwelling. And this must be the cafe in other fystems, supposing them to be regulated by the fame laws which take place in our own. Their inhabitants may have larger capacities than mankind, and a wider province affigned them; and yet have no more power over us, than we have over them; they may have no communication with us, nor any influence beyond the limits of their own globe.

2dly; If we wave the argument from what is called the fcale of being, and appeal to the unbounded power and goodness of God, or to the aftonishing magnificence of the universe, in proof of the existence of creatures of a higher order than man: still these arguments, however conclusive, will not prove, that they are not under the continual government and controul of God, or that they have not all their proper department. For not to alledge, that the power and goodnefs of God, though strictly infinite, and though they have (without doubt) difplayed themfelves in the production of mote noble orders of beings than mankind; are not, however, exerted to the utmost in every, or in any, fingle effect; it is certain, they are never exercifed but under the direction of unerring wifdom, by which all things are framed in-the most

Digitized by Google

1 exact

argue a divine Interpolition.

exact proportions: and as to the univerfe, it is no lefs diffinguifhed by its perfect order and harmony, than by its grandeur and extent. To what purpofe then is it to plead, that we know not what degrees of power God may have communicated to created beings? Can it be fhewn, that they are fubject to no laws, that their influence is unconfined, and reaches to all the fyftems of the univerfe?

But it is the opinion of a juftly celebrated writer \*, that to deny created fpirits the natural power of working miracles, is faying, " they have no power natu-" rally to do any thing at all." He had before explained his meaning more fully, in the following terms +: " Suppofing (which is very unreafonable to " fuppofe) that the natural powers of the higheft an-" gels were no greater than the natural powers of " men; yet fince thereby an angel would be enabled " to do all that invifibly, which a man can do vifi-" bly; he would even, on this fuppofition, be natu-" rally able to do numberlefs things, which we fhould " efteem the greateft of miracles  $\ddagger$ ." Angels, ac-C 4 cording

* Dr. Clarke's fermons, vol. ii. p. 700. fol. ed. or his Boyle's lectures on the Truth and Certainty of the Christian Revelation, prop. 14.

+ P. 697.

‡ The doctor does not confine this reafoning to good angels, but extends it to evil ones, p. 699. " If the devil has any na-" tural power of doing any thing at all, even but fo much as " the meaneft of men; and be not refirained by God from ex-" ercifing that natural power; it is evident he will be able, by " teafon of his invifibility, to work true and real miracles." The

Proofs from Reafon, that Miracles

cording to this learned writer, could not be equal to men in dignity and power, much lefs fuperior to them; nor could they even posses any power at all; unless they are able to work miracles upon this earthly globe: and nothing feems to him more unreasonable, than to deny angels the power of doing all which a man can do; which alone, he acknowledges, would be equivalent to a power of performing the greatest miracles, on account of the invisible manner of their operation. This reafoning proceeds upon thefe two principles, that fuperior natures have the fame (phere of action affigned them with those inferior to them; and that they enjoy the very fame powers and privileges. The former of these is destitute of proof, and the latter is contradicted by the wife order and acconomy of Pro-Has man the strength or swiftness of brute vidence. animals? Can he fly in the air, or dive into the ocean? How much foever man may excel the brutes, he has not the fame organs and powers of action; and his operations must therefore be quite different from theirs. The fame may be true of angels compared with men. Their capacities may be more noble

The ancients alfo, as well as our learned moderns, built their opinion of the vaft powers of demons, upon the fubtlety and finenefs of their make, and their fpiritual nature. Tertullian in particular, after fpeaking of their power to inflict difeafes upon mens bodies, and to caufe a fudden diftraction of foul, adds, "Suppetit illis ad utramque fubftantiam hominis adeundam fubtilitas et tenuitas fua. Multum fpiritalibus viribus licet ut invifibiles in effectu potius quam in actu fuo appareant." Apol. c. 22.

ble than ours; and they may move in a much more exalted fphere, without being able to do every thing which man is capable of doing.

It is a point that hitherto has rather been taken for granted, than proved, that a power of moving matter is effential to all fpiritual beings. It is difficult to difcern any neceffary connexion between their immateriality and a power over matter *. If they are not united

* The late ingenious Dr. Isaac Watts, in the 6th of 'his Philosophical Estays on various subjects, (p. 132. Ift edit. 8vo.) attempts to fhew, that though the almighty fpirit who called the material universe into 'existence, can put the several parts of it into motion as he pleafes, no created spirit has any innate power in itself to move any part of matter; that the world of bodies, and the world of minds, are fo entirely different and feparate in their whole nature, fubftance, and fpecial properties, that they cannot poffibly have any communication with each other, except by a particular appointment of God. Spirits being void of all folidity, cannot move matter by impulle, because there can be no contact. Nor can they (without a divine commission) excite motion in bodies by volition, there being no natural connexion between their volition and the motion of material beings. The power which the human spirit has over its own body, (and thereby over other portions of matter,) is no proof that a fpirit has in itfelf a native power to move matter indefinitely : for the human fpirit, by all its volitions, can move only those particular parts of the body which God has subjected to voluntary motion, and for which proper muscles are provided, together with the nervous powers which are neceffary to move those muscular parts. This limitation of its power fhews, that it is not effential to its nature, but owing to the fpecial ordination and conflitution of God, who by uniting fuch a body to fuch a spirit, has given to man that degree of power over matter which he possefies. . It does not therefore appear, that united to fuch organized fystems of matter, as the fpirit of man is; upon what grounds shall we ascribe to them, that capacity for human actions and enjoyments, which is the fole effect of our union to those particular systems of matter? As reasonably may we suppose, that light and darkness dwell together; or that causes the most opposite to each other, should all produce the same effects; as that fpiritual beings should have the same natural powers with corporeal ones. To the absurdity of this principle, we may add its tendency to countenance the most flagrant immorality. That polluted intercours which was thought to be carried on between the human race and celeftial beings*, of which we read in the lying legends of that any immaterial created fpirit can operate upon matter, unlefs first united to a body. Whether there are any created spirits who are entirely unembodied, I do not here enquire: all I mean, is to shew, that their being spirits does not prove their power of acting upon matter, and of working miracles.

Proofs from Reafon, that Miracles

* We learn from Socrates, (apud Platon. Cratyl.) that the beroes (wao, in the Pagan theology, are ranked next after demons,) " were all of them born from Love, either of a god " with a mortal woman, or of mortal men with goddeffes." Dionyfius Halicarnaffenfis, (Ant. Rom: 1. 1. c. 77. p. 61. ed. Oxon.) after relating the rape of Ilia, explains more fully this doctrine of the Pagans. The Jews, in our Saviour's time, endeavoured to approach as near as poffible to Paganifm; for Jofephus fpeaks of the angels of God mixing with women, and begetting a most wicked offspring, Antiq. 1. I. c. 4. The fame opinion was also embraced by Philo. And what is yet more to be lamented, many Christian writers, Justin Martyr, (Apol. 1. p. 10 & 33. ed. Thirlbii.) Tertullian, (Apol. c. 22.) Athenagoras.

argue a divine Interpolition.

of Jewish rabbis, and Gentile poets and philosophers, gained credit upon the pretence, (and was indeed no unnatural confequence from it), that superior beings possibles the fame powers with mankind, and could at pleasure assure a human form. This maxim has ferved as a cover for the luss of mankind, in Popish as well as pagan countries; though, perhaps, it was at first invented to support the credit of a false theology. What the heathen priests once incorporated into their religion, that the philosophers undertook to justify. And too many Christians (in the true spirit of the Jews before them) have ever been more fond of the foulest dregs of Paganism, than of that holy religion which came down from heaven.

If we fet afide the wild fables of antiquity, (however dignified with the pompous title of philofophy,) and form our judgment of fuperior beings by the fober rule of analogy; we fhall be under no temptation to reduce the natural powers of created beings to a low degree; (a liberty which a learned writer * is pleafed ras, Clemens Alexandrinus, Cyprian and others, maintained that demons, in the fhape of the heathen gods, had commerce with women, and defiled boys; and they endeavoured to father thefe fentiments upon a paffage of facred fcripture, Gen. vi. 2. I would not take notice of a circumftance which reflects no fmall diffonour upon fo many of the primitive Chriftians, did it not appear to be a matter of great importance to be continually recollected, that when they embraced Chriftianity, they, at the fame time, defiled it with the groffeft doctrines of Paganifm.

Digitized by Google

* Dr. Clarke's Serm. Vol. 2. p. 697.

43

Proofs from Reafon, that Miracles

pleafed to allow us :) the confideration of their polfeffing powers fuperior to mankind, will not create any proof, or even the lowest degree of prefumption, that they have any power over this earthly globe, or are capable of diffurbing the laws by which it is governed. Reason does indeed make known to us one almighty, omniprefent Being, who is at liberty to act every where, and in what manner he pleafes; and his omnipotence is the only adequate caufe, we are capable of discovering in the whole compass of existence, of those effects which are called miraculous : to him therefore it is most natural to ascribe them. With regard to all other beings, it is not pretended that they exift neceffarily; and that it is impoffible for them to be excluded from any place, or confined to any: they may therefore, nay, they must have fome limits circumfcribed to their agency. The very fame kind of reasoning which is thought to prove their existence, does much more clearly shew, that all their powers are bounded, and their station fixed by their omnipotent creator, and that they cannot act beyond their proper fphere. Should it be faid, "That allowing that " fuperior created beings have only a limited fphere " of action affigned them; yet how does it appear, " that this lower world itfelf is not their appointed " fphere, and that they have not a power of inter-" pofing to work miracles upon this earthly globe?" The anfwer will be contained in the following fection.

SECT.

Digitized by Google

argue a divine Interpolition.

SECT. II.

The fuppolition of the power of any created agents to work miracles of themfelves in this lower world, is contradicted by the observation and experience of all ages : there being, in fact, no proper evidence of the truth of any miracles, but fuch as may filly be aferibed to the Deity. The objection, that God may lay created fpirits under a general, but not an univerfal reftraint, c.nfulered.

THIS being a quefion of fact; it is manifefly incumbent upon those who affirm, that miracles have been performed by evil beings acting without the order of God, to produce the facts upon which they chuse to rest their cause, and to establish them by an evidence which cannot be overturned *.

In the mean time, if we confult our own observation and experience; we find that God governs the world by fixed and established laws. The more we improve in the knowledge of nature, the more regular does it appear in all its productions. Even the minutest parts of it obey the laws of God as constantly as the most magnificent bodies in the firmament, and co-operate with

• To prevent millakes, it may not be improper to obferve, that it is not here intended to prove, that no fuperior beings fland in any relation to our fystem, or that they never operate within its limits in a manner imperceptible by the human fenfes; but merely that they do not interpose fensibly, and in a miraculous manner. We are not fo well acquainted with the regulations of the fpiritual, as with those of the material world.

Proofs from Reason, that Miracles

with them in their proper fphere for the prefervation and benefit of the whole. And this regularity of the courfe of nature is an argument, that it is not difturbed by any miraculous interpofitions. Now if evil fpirits do not work miracles at prefent; why fhould we believe they ever have? Indeed, our not having feen any miracles ourfelves, is a fufficient reafon for rejecting those that are reported by others; unless it can be shewn, that they were expedient in the times and places, in which they are faid to have been performed, to answer some extraordinary purposes of divine providence; or that they are attended by an evidence of their certainty, superior to the natural prefumption of their falsehood, and to the proofs which fatisfy us with regard to the common events of life.

But this is far from being the cafe, with regard to the generality of those miracles which are related in biftory. Amongst them all, we shall find none which on any account deferve credit; except fuch as in their nature, intention, and circumstances, are worthy of God; and which therefore, allowing their reality, may reafonably be fuppofed to have him for their au-Of this kind are the miracles of the Jewish thor. and Christian dispensations. But we are here inquiring into the reality of fuch miracles, as are thought to have been performed by fome evil agent. With regard to thefe; fuch of them as are best fupported, have been feverally weighed in the balance of reason, and been found wanting *. It has been fhewn,

* Cicero in his fecond book of divination, (in which he confutes the arguments advanced in favour of it in the first,) and Fontenelle fhewn, that they are defititute of every effential character of truth, and bear all the diffinguishing features of human impostures ; that they are trifling, ludicrous and absurd in their own nature; or destitute of all rational intention, and manifestly calculated to answer some low or worldly purpose; that they are related by incompetent witneffes, against whose skill and integrity there are the ftrongeft exceptions; and that they never gained credit amongst any, but those whofe ignorance and fuperstition exposed them to the groffelt delutions *. In all those cafes in which the facts cannot be denied, their miraculous nature may justly be called in question. The ancient prodigies, fuch of them, I mean, as were not mere fictions, were natural accidents, interpreted arbitrarily, and which Fontenelle in his Hiftory of Oracles, (which is an elegant abridgement of Vandale's larger work on the fame fubject;) have fufficiently difcredited the feveral modes of Pagan prophecy. And Dr. Douglafs in his Criterion, and many other excellent writers, have very fuccefsfully exposed the falfehood of the beft attefted miracles, both amongft Papifts and Pagans.

* Some learned perfons, fenfible that the devil does not manifeft a miraculous power in all countries and in all ages, though they imagine he fometimes does; maintain, "that the world of "fpirits may undergo many variations, and be fubject to different "reftraints and regulations in different ages, fo as to interfere "more or lefs or not at all in human affairs." Dr Taylor's fcheme of Scripture-Divinity, p. 266. But thefe (fuppofed) revolutions in the world of fpirits, correfpond to the known and certain revolutions of learning and fcience here on earth. Now whether is it most reafonable to believe, that human knowledge contracts, and human ignorance and credulity enlarge, the empire of which created terror only as their caufes were unknown. It is merely in those ages and countries in which nature was little understood, that prodigies have abounded. Lastly, Very many cases supposed miraculous, may be resolved by considering how nature and art may have acted in conjunction *. In a word, all the facts appealed to, in proof of the miraculous agency of evil spirits, are either not supernatural, or not real. I will not descend into particulars, that I may not repeat what has been fo well urged by others; but only add a few general observations, which seem to affect the credit of all those miracles, which, in case they had been really performed, could not have God for their author.

1/t; None have ever yet attempted to fhew, that any of the miracles in queftion, are fupported by an evidence fuperior to the natural improbability or abfurdity of the facts themfelves. How far they are improbable or abfurd, will appear from what occurs in the fequel. In the mean time all must admit, that the more improbable any fact is, the more unexceptionable of fpirits who belong to the other world; or, that it is not their real power, but mens belief concerning it, which is thus affected by the progrefs or declension of human knowledge? What Livy fays of the prodigies which were reported to have happened at Rome at a particular period, is applicable to demoniacal miracles: "Prodigia eo anno multa nuntiata funt, " quæ quo magis credebant fimplices ac religiofi homines, ea " plura nuntiabantur." Lib. 24. c. 10.

* The curious may find this observation very well illustrated in Dr. Hutchinfon on Witchcraft.

Digitized by Google

I

tionable should the evidence be by which it is supported: and if it be absurd, no testimony in favour of it can be worthy of credit.

2dly; It is univerfally allowed, that mo/t of these miracles were the mere effects of human artifice and fraud. Now, if mo/t were fo, why not alt? The principles upon which all men condemn fo large a part, if carried to their just extent, would oblige them to condemn the whole. At least, it must be allowed to be incumbent on those who make a distinction, to point out the difference between those demoniacal miracles which they reject, and those which they receive: a task which they have hitherto prudently declined *.

3dly; The reafon affigned for not allowing all of them to be human frauds, viz. "Left, if out of fo ma-"ny facts alledged, none of them are true, we fhould "deftroy the credit of all human teftimony, even "that upon which the miracles of Scripture are "built;" is both inconclusive in itself, and diffion-D ourable

* We might add, that the behaviour of the perfons, who are thought to have performed miracles and delivered oracles by the affiftance of evil fpirits, is exactly fuch as agrees with the fuppofition of their being deflitute of that affiftance, and having no other dependence than human artifice and fraud. Now if their miracles were real, why did they always act as if they had been fictitious? Why were not the works performed in fuch a manner, as clearly to manifest the interpofition of fome fuperior being? And why did the conductors of the ancient oracles, in order to maintain their credit, take fuch pains to procure early and univerfal intelligence, if fecret, diffant, and future events were fupernaturally revealed? See Lucian's Alexand. feu Pfeudomant.

ourable to true religion. Notwithstanding these, and ten thousand other instances of the deceitfulness of human teftimony; yet has it ever been allowed and found, under proper circumstances, to be a very fafe and reafonable ground of reliance. The numerous frauds of every kind which have obtained in the world, are a ground of caution, not of universal scepticism. Though many miracles have been forged, it will not from thence follow, that no real miracles have ever been performed. Nay, " how can we ac-" count for a practice fo universal of forging mira-" cles for the support of false religions, if on some " occasions they had not actually been wrought for " the confirmation of a true one? Or how is it " possible, that fo many spurious copies should pass " upon the world, without fome genuine original " from which they were drawn; whofe known exist-" ence and tried fuccefs might give an appearance of " probability to the counterfeit *?" It would be unreasonable, either to receive or reject all miracles alike; in cafe there be a just distinction between some and others. Now the miracles of Scripture are more credible in their own nature than any others, being performed for ends of the higheft importance, fuch as are fuitable to the character of an infinitely perfect Being, and which could not be accomplished in any other method. Their truth is confirmed, by witneffes of the most unfuspected credit; by the public revolutions revolutions and events which they produced, (fuch as the conversion of the world to the Christian faith *,) and which cannot poffibly be accounted for, but upon the fuppolition of their truth; by the clear prophecies delivered by the authors of these works, of the completion of which distant ages are witneffes; and by a variety of other arguments peculiar to these miracles, and which ferve to detect and expose the falfehood of all others. Those feem to me but ill to confult the credit of the Gofpel miracles, who place them on a level with groß impostures, instead of pointing out the wide difference between them; and who have no other way of supporting the Christian faith, than by countenancing lies and popular errors, which in all ages has created the ftrongeft prejudice against it, and given occasion to boundless sufpicions +.

* Dr. Middleton's Prefatory Difcourse to a letter from Rome, p. 86-88.

4thly; Many even of those miracles, which of all others seemed to have the fairest pretensions to credit, have been undeniably proved to be mere impostures. Amongst these I reckon many of the miracles of D 2 popery,

* The miracles of Christianity confirmed a doctrine contrary to mens frongest prejudices, and could not be believed without danger : other miracles, for the most part, cannot be rejected without danger, and are defigned to establish popular and profitable errors.

+ " Dum per mendacium tenditur, ut fides doceatur, id " demum agitur, ut nulli habetur fides." St. August. ad Consentium.

5 I.

popery *, and those of witchcraft +, both of them attested upon oath by pretended eye-witness, and the latter examined into with all the accuracy and authority of a court of justice, and yet both afterwards found to be the offspring of fraud and delusion. Amongst all those which have escaped detection, there is no ground to prefume, that there is one either more credible in itself, or more strongly attested, than those in which the imposture has been discovered. And therefore, without troubling ourfelves to account forevery particular relation; is there not the highest reason to believe, that, had they all been equally subject to examination, and undergone a rigorous inquiry, the imposture must have been discovered in all?

Now, if there be no fufficient reason to believe, that any superior spirits acting without the order of God, have ever, from the beginning of the world to this day, performed a single miracle upon our earthly globe; how void of all foundation, must be the afcribing to them a miraculous power? Were they possesses were they a miraculous power? Were they would have exerted it frequently; especially as it may be so easily made subservent to the purposes of malevolence and impiety? What missions of every kind might not wicked spirits, from a principle of envy and hatred, introduce amongst mankind? And if good * Several remarkable concessions of Papists themselves upon this head, are cited below, ch. 3. sect. 4. art. 5.

Digitized by Google

+ See Hutchinson on Witchcraft, ch. 1.

52

good fpirits enjoyed an equal liberty of doing good offices to men; what a theatre of contention would our globe have been between spirits of such opposite dispositions and defigns? And therefore, if in a long fucceffion of ages, there has been no appearance of any fuch contest between virtuous and wicked spirits; if no motives whatever have excited the one or the other to exert a miraculous power, fo much as once; is it not a natural inference, that they do not poffefs it? With regard to God, indeed; reason informs us, that he who established the course of nature, can change it at pleafure, even whether he has already done fo or not. But the cafe is different as to other beings, whofe powers and operations are only to be known (in a natural way) by observation and experience. God is manifest in every part of nature; but who can point out the effects of other fpirits, and their operations on the universe? And if we see no effects of their agency on this earthly globe, if no fuch effects have ever been feen; there can be no ground from reason to ascribe it to them. It is as repugnant to the observation and experience of all ages, to afcribe to evil fpirits a miraculous power, as it is to afcribe life to the inanimate, or speech to the brute creation.

To deftroy the force of this argument, fome have pleaded, " that fuperior created intelligences, evil as " well as good, do not want the natural power of " working miracles, but only the liberty of exerting " it : and notwithstanding they may be restrained " from using it frequently or commonly; yet that it D 3 can

" can never be proved, (as a great * writer expresses " it) that they are under fuch restraints, universally, " perpetually, and without exception." There is evidently, I acknowledge, a real difference between having the power of performing miracles or of producing any other effects, and the actual exercise of that power; and those perforts may have the power, who do not exercife it, provided their not exercifing it be the matter of their own choice. But I fcarce understand the propriety of representing any persons as having a power, which they are restrained from exercifing by others. As far as they lofe their liberty of exerting it, their power is abridged. The malefactor confined in a dungeon, and the flave chained to a galley, by lofing the liberty, lofes the power of going beyond the limits of bis dungeon, and the length of his chain. Not, however, to infift upon this; I would observe, in answer to this objection, First, That were the Deity to lay fuperior beings under fuch a general restraint as is here supposed; the removal of that reftraint, and the fetting them at liberty on any particular occasion, on purpose that they might work particular miracles, and with no other view; would be giving them more than a bare permiffion, (as fome reprefent it;) it would be giving them both a power and a commission to perform those particular miracles on that fpecial occasion. The miraculous works in this cafe could not be confidered in the fame light as the ordinary actions of free agents, to whom God indulges

* Dr. Clarke, V. 2. p. 697. fol. ed,

54

Digitized by Google

dulges the use of their natural powers; but would argue a special licence, and even the express appointment of the Deity. Now, we are not contending, that God may not commission and empower whom he pleafes to work miracles; this being, in effect, the fame thing as performing them himfelf. And he can never give his fanction to impollure. So that the objection we are confidering, were it well grounded, can never ferve the main caufe of those by whom it is urged, or enable them to fhew that miracles may accompany a falle doctrine. Secondly, There is, however, no manner of foundation for the objection. For our judgments are to be guided by facts, not by arbitrary hypothefes : and therefore, unlefs it can be fhewn, that there is full and fufficient evidence of the truth of fome miracles, which cannot fitly be afcribed to God; there is just the fame reason to believe, that fuperior created intelligences are univerfally and perpetually reftrained from working miracles, as that they are generally fo. The very fame observation and experience which convince us that there are any laws of nature at all, demonstrate that those laws are univerfally and invariably executed. Thirdly, The objection proceeds upon a fuppolition not only groundlefs, but abfurd : it fuppofes, that God communicates and continues to his creatures, powers which he has hitherto, through an unknown length of ages past, almost totally restrained them from exerting, and which he will equally reftrain them from exerting through all future generations. Indeed, as it cannot be shewn. that he has in any fingle instance bitherto permitted, fo there is all imaginable reason to believe he never will D4 hereafter hereafter in any fingle instance permit, them to exercife that miraculous power which they are fuppofed to poffes. And can there be a stronger reflection upon the wifdom of God, than to maintain that he constantly denies his creatures the use of those natural powers which he bestows and preferves? He has indeed fixed the bounds, beyond which they cannot act; nevertheles, it is a flagrant contradiction to all that we know of the works of God, to fuppofe that within those bounds they are not allowed freely to exert themfelves. And therefore what fome are pleafed to call a restraint upon the liberty of fuperior beings, is more properly a natural inability of working miracles *; and the argument against their possessing a miraculous power, from their never having made ufe of it, remains in its full force.

55

To what purpose is it to plead, " that we do not " know the other world?" We are not unacquainted with this, to which the present inquiry refers. In the foregoing fection we have endeavoured to shew, that if we reason from analogy, and that view which we are able to take of the works of God; the various orders of beings superior to the human kind act only within a certain limited sphere. And if what we have advanced farther in the present section be just, this lower lower world is not their appointed fphere of action; and confequently they are prevented from working miracles by the very law of their nature, without a fpecial divine affiftance and commission. Now, if there are no other beings capable of performing miracles; to whom shall we ascribe them but to God? Upon this principle, they must be considered as the immediate operation of the divine power.

* If this reafoning appears to any to be inconclusive, my main argument will not be affected: for that equally holds good, whether God by a perpetual law refirains all invisible agents from interposing at any time to alter the regular course of things in this lower world; or whether they want a natural power of interposing for any fuch purpose.

56

SECT. III.

The laws of nature being ordained by God, and effential to the order and happiness of the world; it is impossible God should delegate to any of his creatures a power of working miracles, by which those divine establishments may be superseded and controuled.

B<sup>Y</sup> the laws of nature, I do not mean those laws to which fuperior invisible agents are fubject. ed, but the rules by which this visible world is governed, and more especially the usual course and order of things in the system to which we belong*. When miracles are performed, these laws are superfeded, and may be suspended and controuled. I am here to shew, that the idea of miracles, as contradictions to the laws and course of nature, contains a proof of their never being performed without the immediate agency or order of the sovereign Author and Lord of nature. Consider the design of these laws, and

* See ch. 1. fect. 1. p. 3.

and the authority by which they were enacted. The laws of nature were at first ordained, and are continually preferved by God; they are the rules by which he exercises his dominion over the world. His wifdom did not, and indeed could not, fee fit to leave the world without laws; or (which would have been much the fame thing) leave those laws to be controuled at the will of his creatures, to the first and conftant observance of which we owe, the regularity and uniformity of the natural world; the fettled order of causes and effects in the moral; and the continued harmony of the universe, all the parts of which are related to each other, and confpire together to carry on one common defign, and thus demonstrate that all things are under the fleady and conflant direction of one ruling counfel. Nothing gives fo much force to the argument from the natural world in fayour of true theifm, or enables us fo effectually to answer the principal objections against it, as the stability and invariable permanency of the courfe of nature. The conftancy of it conftitutes its beauty. And what would be the confequence of God's departing from the rules which he has fettled in the world, but the violation and disparagement of his own majesty and wildom, and the perplexity, confusion and diftrefs of his creatures, instead of that order which now reigns every where? If God did not govern the world by fleady measures *, no room would be given บร us for the exertion and improvement of our faculties, nor any affistance afforded us for the direction of our conduct; a grown man would no more know how to manage himfelf in the affairs of life, than an infant just born: which one confideration abundantly over-balances whatever particular inconveniences may thence arife. The laws of nature being ordained for the general good, are not violated or fuperfeded even by the great ruler of the world himfelf, to prevent partial evil, or on any occasion whatever, unless when the most important ends of his government necessarily require a miraculous interpolition. What probability then is there, that any other beings fhould be able to dispose of the laws of nature, and interrupt them at their pleafure, or (which is the fame thing) prevent them from producing their ufual effects? Nay, there feems to be a neceffity, that natural caufes fhould operate in the most uniform and steady manner. For were God to grant to fuperior beings, fome of them good, others evil, all of them finite and imperfect, a power of working miracles at pleafure, fuch as might fuperfede and controul the operation of nature; there could be no law of nature, no fettlement or fixed conftitution of things at all; every appointment of God for our benefit might be defeated, and the order of this lower world be destroyed. If spirits, according to the doctrine of the Platonic philosophers, are naturally able to move matter, or any particular parts of it, not only in our fystem, but in every other throughout the universe; what a boundless empire would they enjoy? and with what extensive defolation might they overfpread the face of the whole cretion?

* See above, ch. 1. fect. 2. p. 12. and Berkley's Treatife concerning the principles of human knowledge, part 1. fect, 31, 151.

tion? But is it credible, that God has fubjected the universe to the power of every fingle fpirit superior to mankind, however malignant in his difpolition? The order * of the world feems to make it neceffary, that all created agents fhould be effectually reftrained or difabled from diffurbing that order, in the manner they might do, did they poffels the power of mi-And there must be a divine law or constituracles. tion, preventing the interpolition of fuperior beings in this manner upon our earthly globe in particular, Unable as we might have been to determine by fpeculative reafonings, or arguments a priori, what conftitution of the universe it became God to establish: vet we may difcern the wifdom, the fitnefs, and in fome degree the necessity, of that constitution which we fee he has actually established, and confequently the impoffibility of its being fubjected to the arbitrary will of any of his creatures, from whole dominion and controul we find it in fact to be exempted. The laws which the wifdom of God ordained for the general good, his omnipotence carries into certain execution, without the least danger of being checked or controuled by any oppofing power. Hence arifes the impoffibility of miracles being ever performed without the * Should it be here objected, that the order of the world does not forbid rare and occafional, but only frequent and common diffurbances of the courfe of nature: I answer, that we have already proved, ch. 2. sect. 2. p. 54. that there is no foundation for this diffinction, as it respects superior created agents, who appear to be not only generally, but univer/ally restrained from working miracles.

the order of God. Not that the works themfelves, abstractedly confidered, require the exertion of an infinite power *; but the course of nature being a divine settlement, it cannot, in any instance whatever, be overturned by any finite power, without God's express appointment. This is affirming nothing more, than that there is no being in the universe capable of opposing the Deity with success.

The most eminent philosophers and divines have maintained, that the law of nature is not only the ordinance, but the operation of God, and denotes the rule by which his energy is unceasingly exerted in the government of the world; and that natural effects are as much the operation of God as even miracles themfelves. This doctrine is strenuously maintained by Dr. Clarke in particular, in many of his writings †. And

* See above, ch. 1. fect. 3. p. 28-30.

+ Sermons, V. 1. p. 620, 621. V. 2. p. 287, 296, 297, 697, 698, fol. ed. In fome of the passages here referred to, I acknowledge, the Doctor, in speaking of God's acting upon matter continually and every moment, diftinguishes between his doing it immediately by bimself, and his doing it mediately by fome created intelligent beings; and the latter feems to him most probable. On this supposition, indeed, it might be as easy for created intelligences to alter, as to continue the course of nature. But if matter be (as this very eminent philolopher affirms) incapable of any powers whatfoever; excepting only this one negative power, that every part of it will, of itfelf, always and necessarily continue in that state, whether of rest or motion. wherein it at prefent is : and if all those things which we commonly fay are the effects of the natural powers of matter, are the effects of some intelligent being's acting upon matter continually

And therefore, if his doctrine be true, by contending for the power of evil fpirits to work miracles; does he not contend for their power to fuspend and controul the operations of divine omnipotence? But whether you confider the course of nature as the regular and continued operation of God, or as his constitution only, and the fixed rule and plan of his government; it cannot be controuled at any time, but by the fame authority by which it was at first established, and is continually preferved. And confequently miracles,which superfede the laws of nature and providence, and difplay a fovereign dominion over them, do not only most naturally bespeak, but necessarily argue, the immediate interpolition and authority of the Lord of nature, the omnipotent creator and governor of the world, who reigns without any rival. If it be true in fact, that God governs the world by general laws, and nually and every moment: to whom is it fo reafonable to afcribe this univerfal and perpetual agency on matter, and every particle of it, throughout the unbounded univerfe, as to the eternal and omniprefent Deity? We are fure that matter cannot refift the unremitted and almighty energy of his fovereign will, who only fpeaks, and it is done; who commands, and it ftands faft for ever. But how does it appear, that created fpirits have any power to move matter of themfelves, and without the fpecial commiffion of God? (See above, ch. 2. feft. 1. p. 41.) And is it not more reafonable to believe, that the Deity maintains his fovereignty in a more immediate manner over his own world, and thofe laws of motion on which its order depends; than that he has fubjected them to the inclinations and volition of any of his creatures, who are neceffarily finite and imperfect?

and it be neceffary that he fhould do fo; he has not delegated, he cannot delegate, to any of his creatures any power over them. To do this, would be to refign the reigns of government. But the neceffity of God's preferving the laws of nature inviolate, will more fully appear, as we proceed in confidering the farther abfurdities which attend the contrary doctrine.

SECT. IV.

The afcribing to any fuperior beings, befides God, and these immediately commifioned by him, the power of working miracles, fubwerts the foundation of natural piety, and is a fruitful fource of idolatry and fuperflition.

T is evident, that prior to all fupernatural revelation, we have no other way of knowing God, than by the works of nature. From these we infer the existence, and attributes, and providence of their almighty Author: principles which are the basis both of all religion, and of all our happiness. But if fu-. perior beings acting without the order of God, can work miracles; shall we not lose our proof of the existence and perfections of God from the works of nature? For fome miracles, fuch as turning inanimate rods-into living beings, and raifing the dead, are fo perfectly fimilar to the works of creation, and the original gift of life, as not eafily to be diffinguished from them; and afford just reason to conclude, that any of the authors of fuch miracles might be the creators of the world: which would leave it doubtful, to whom we we were indebted for our existence, amongst the numerous beings equally capable of conferring upon us that important favour *.

If others befides God could change the order of nature; what evidence should we have of his wildom and providence in the continual government of the world? For this evidence arifes from that regularity and uniformity, which we observe in the course of nature, proceeding on from age to age without interruption. Could others change the order of nature. even when acting in opposition to nature's Lord; what reafon would there be to fear, that there were other gods in the universe befides him, fuch as were independent upon him, and as oppofite to him in their natures and defigns, as they were in their operations ? Nay, on this fuppolition, there would be full ground to apprehend, that he who had given laws to nature, had himfelf a fuperior lord, who could controul his appointments, and fubvert his empire.

Even if it could be proved upon the principles of our adverfaries, that the author of nature had no fuperior or equal, and that it was by his permiffion that others fhared with him the government of the world; this alone would be defiructive to all true piety. If the * Even without fuch an inducement as miracles, many amongft the heathens have afcribed the creation of ferpents and other noxious animals, and even of the whole visible world, to an evil being, in opposition to the divine intention. Nay, fome learned advocates of the Christian revelation, in this enlightened age, feem to think, that invisible beings may be possefied of powers equal to the making and governing of worlds.

б4

the course of nature be not under the sole direction of God; what foundation can there be for our worship of God alone, and for the continual exercises of gratitude and fubmiffion to him, in every condition? If we believe, that other invisible beings can interpole in our affairs at their own pleasure, and either inflict punishments or bestow bleffings upon us, such as are quite out of the ordinary course of nature, and contrary to it; could we confider ourfelves as under the protection and government of God? Would it not be natural and unavoidable for us, to pay homage to those who had the disposal of our lot, and, by all the means which we judged fuitable to that end, to engage their favour, and avert their difpleafure? It was this belief of the power of demons, to difpense both good and evil to mankind, that was the foundation of that worship which was paid them in the Pagan world. And had they given proof of their power; it would have been unreasonable to deny them worship \*. To fear or hope without any grounds, is very abfurd: but to fear or hope where there is just reason for either, where there is real power either to protect or punish us, is an evident dictate of the understanding. The passions of hope and fear do indeed necessarily arise in the human mind, upon the contemplation of a power, that may be employed either for our benefit or prejudice; and will ever be accompanied with a fuitable concern to Е render render that power propitious to us \*. Concerning the Jews themfelves, even after their return from their captivity at Babylon, when they are generally fuppofed to be entirely cured of their fondnefs for idolatry, we are told, that on the day of expiation they offered a goat to Sammael or Satan, that he might not accufe them of their crimes before God, becaufe they believed him to have the power of doing it  $\frac{1}{7}$ .

* See below, ch. 2. fect. 5. p. 77.

With regard to Christians, it is in words, chiefly, that many of them differ from the ancient Pagans, who deified the fupposed principle of evil. If they refuse the devil the name of God, they go very far in allowing him the attributes and prerogatives of God-head. They conceive of him as a kind of omnipresent

* It feems very reafonable to infer from hence, that no miracles were ever performed amongft the Pagans, except by the meffengers of the true God, with the express and declared intention of manifesting and distinguishing him from the false: for without this precaution, the Pagans would naturally have referred these works (had any such been wrought amongst them) to their own gods, considered them as new displays of their divinity, and been engaged to worship them with new zeal and ardour. This is evident from the conduct of the idolatrous Lycaonians, who, before they were better instructed by St. Paul, concluded from the miracle he performed upon the cripple, that the gods were come down in the likeness of men, and proceeded without delay to perform the rites of adoration. Acts xiv. 8-18.

+ See Buxtorf's Chald. Talmud. & Rab. Lexicon, on the word Sammael, p. 1495, and Bochart's Hierozoic. 1. 2. c. 54. p. 652.

niprefent and omniscient spirit *; and ascribe to him fuch a dominion over the human race as can belong to none but the fovereign of the universe. To the, devil they afcribe frofts, and tempests, and infectious air, blights upon the fruits of the earth, the diseafes of cattle, the difasters and distempers of mens bodies, phrenfy and the alienation of their minds, and the power of inflicting even cruel deaths +. This error has begotten amongst Christians, though not an idolatrous worship, yet endless and cruel superstitions 1, particularly witchcraft, which alone has occasioned a vast effusion of human blood; as the records of every country can witnefs. No lefs than nine hundred witches have in fome very fmall provinces been put to death in the space of a few years ||. Nevertheles, the grand principle upon which this detestable art is built, viz. " the natural power of the devil to de-" ftroy mens bodies and lives, to bring upon them " innumerable other calamities, and to work mira-". cles. E 2

* Tertullian. Apol. c. 22.

;:

l

† Tertullian. Apol. c. 22. & de anim. c. 57. and Dr. Macnight's Truth of the Gospel History, p. 172, 173. Dr. Whitby on Luke xii. 16. Heb. ii. 14. Josephus de B. I. l. 7. c. 25. and Tobit vi. 7. ch. viii. 2. ch. iii. 8.

‡ We hence fee, with how little reason it is affirmed, that inasmuch as we are liable to evils, it can make no difference to whom they are ascribed. Befides, did the evils we suffer proceed from the power and pleasure of evil spirits; why are they not greater and more numerous?

|| Mead's Medica Sacra, præfat. p. 11, 12.

67

" cles *," is ftill maintained by the greatest names in the republic of learning. On this foundation, laid for him by philosophy, the wizzard easily raises his own fuperstructure. While the philosopher afferts the power of wicked fpirits to produce the most extraordinary effects, out of the common course of nature; the wizzard prefumes, and not unreasonably, that they have the u/e of this power : for a power which they cannot use, is, in effect, no power at all. And he advances only one step farther, when he pretends to a familiar intercourfe with them, or to be skilled in the manner of fetting them to work. Now this difference between them is very trifling; fince, if the devil can interpofe in the manner fuppofed by both, it matters not whether he does it with, or without the inftrumentality of human beings. Most melancholy is it to reflect, how much the general principle we are here opposing, viz. the power of Satan to work. miracles, and the various fuperstitions grounded upon it; have contributed in all ages, and in all nations, to the disquiet and corruption of the human race, and to the extinction of rational piety. This confideration alone, were there no other, should check the zeal of Christians to maintain an opinion, fo deftructive to our virtue and happiness; and which the wifelt heathens, from principles of benevolence and piety, earneftly wifhed and laboured to extirpate +.

In

* Dr. Clarke's Serm. V. 2. p. 700, folio.

+ Superfitio fuía per gentes, oppressi omnium fere animos, atque hominum imbecillitatem occupavit.--Multum enim & nobismet

68

In a word, if we entertain just and honourable fentiments of the constitution of the universe, and its all-wife and benevolent author; can we believe that he has subjected us to the pleasure and disposal of superior beings, many of whom are supposed to be as capricious and malevolent as they are powerful? Has God put our very life, and the whole happiness of it, into such hands? This some maintain he has done; and this he must have done, if he has granted them the power of working miracles at pleasure: an opinion, which cannot fail to rivet Heathens in their idolatry, and Christians in the most detestable superstitions.

SECT. V.

If miracles were performed in favour of falle doctrines; mankind would be exposed to frequent and unavoidable delution.

MIRACLES may be confidered either apart by themfelves, or in their relation * to the miffion and doctrines of a prophet. It is in the former view, that they have been confidered in the preceding fections of this chapter: we fhall now examine them in the latter; which will furnifh us with new evidence of their being works peculiar to God.' What I fhall E 3 attempt nobismet ipsis, & nostris profuturi videbamur, si eam funditus sustulissemus. Cicero de divinat. 1. 2. c. 72.

* What circumstances are necessary to point out this relation, is particularly shewn below, ch. 5. at the beginning.

69

attempt in this fection, is to fhew, that were evil fpirits at liberty to work miracles to impofe upon mankind, the error might be abfolutely invincible. In proof of this affertion, I appeal to the natural fenfe of ntankind concerning miracles, and to those impreffions which they always make upon the mind, when free from the bias of prejudice.

It is certainly more natural, to refer miracles to God, than to any other invisible being : for reason informs us clearly and certainly, that God can, but does not equally inform us that any other being can, perform these works *. And inasmuch as the course of nature is a divine constitution, it must be unnatural to suppose, that any being, befides God, is at liberty to controul it +. Accordingly it appears in fact, that mankind confider miracles as the works of God, and as divine testimonials to a prophet, whenever they are performed and appealed to as fuch. This is evident, not only from the immediate regard t which has been shewn to genuine miracles, whenever they have been wrought; but also from the frequent pretenfions to them, in all ages, and in all nations of the world. Had they not been generally confidered as divine works, and authentic proofs of a divine miffion; they would not have been forged in support of every falfe religion that pretended to come from God. Nay, * Ch. 2. fect. 2.

/ + Ch. 2. fect. 3.

‡ 1 Kings xvii. 24. ch. xviii. 39. John iii. 2. Mat. xv. 30, 31. ch. ix. 8. Luke xiii. 13, 17. Acts iii. 10. ch. iv. 31. ch. xiv. 11.

70

Nay, fo ftrong an-impression of their own divinity do genuine miracles leave upon the human mind, that their force is felt even by those, whose natural sentiments concerning them are most perverted by the errors of fuperstition, and the refinements of learning. It is ftrongly felt by the whole Christian world, notwithstanding their speculative opinions are calculated to defeat it *; and not lefs by infidels and atheifts, who never think themfelves fafe in rejecting religion, till they have perfuaded themfelves, that every hiftory of miracles is falfe. Spinoza himfelf, as Mr. Bayle + affures us, faid to his friends, " That if he could be " convinced of the refurrection of Lazarus, he would " break his whole fystem into pieces, and readily em-" brace the common faith of Christians." The very Pharifees, when most blinded and hardened by their malice against Christ, confessed the force of this evidence in his favour, when they faid, " This man " does many miracles. If we let him thus alone, " all men will believe on him t." And indeed the whole world would have believed on him on account of his miracles, had they not been prejudiced against I add, that Christians must allow, that his doctrine. miracles, when performed in attestation of a professed mission from God, constitute an evidence adapted to the frame of the human mind, and the genuine fentiments of nature; for both our Saviour and his apof-E 4 tles

* Preface.

+ General Dictionary, article Spinoza, note R.

‡ John xi. 47, 48.

7 I

tles contented themfelves with the mere exhibition of this evidence, and then left it to produce its proper effect.

Now, if miracles, by their own natural influence, are calculated to procure immediate credit to the doctrine they atteft; if they conftitute an evidence adapted to the common fenfe and feelings of mankind; if they make an impression which fcarce any resistance can totally prevent or efface: it is an eafy and obvious inference from hence, that if they were performed in favour of falfe doctrines, the generality of mankind would be neceffarily exposed to frequent delution. And those would be the least able to refist the impression of miracles, who had the strongest fense of God upon their minds, the most honourable apprehensions of his natural and moral government, and were the most fearful of incurring his displeasure, by rejecting any revelation of his will.

Here it will be objected, "That if miracles were "wrought to confirm fallehood, the nature of the "doctrine might ferve to guard us againft being de-"ceived, and direct us to afcribe the works to fome "evil agent, who was permitted to perform them for "the trial of mankind." In anfwer to this objection, it might perhaps be fufficient to obferve, that what foune call God's permitting, would be in reality empowering and commifficient gevil fpirits to work miracles. For God's removal of the reftraint or difability which those fpirits are under at all other times, amounts to his giving them both a power and a commiffion to work miracles on this particular occafion*. And * See above, ch. 2. fect. 2. 54.

Digitized by Google

72

And this God cannot do in confirmation of falsehood.

But much stress being laid on this objection, we will offer fome farther observations upon it. The most arbitrary and unnatural suppositions, when they have been long made, are thought at last to have fome foundation to fupport them, and require the fame notice to be taken of them as if they had. It is not true in fact *, that any miracles have ever been performed in support of error, on purpole to try our faith. At least, no fufficient evidence appears of the truth of any fuch miracles. Nor do the ends of the divine government feem to require, that mankind should be exposed to this particular trial. The temptations which occur in the ordinary courfe of providence, are abundantly fufficient to exercise our virtue; and it is quite needless that miracles should be wrought, merely to put it to a farther proof. Now, if reafon cannot fhew, that mankind ought to be, and experience convinces us that they never have been, exposed to the delusion of false doctrines inforced by miracles; the notion that they may be fo, must be confidered as a mere fiction. Befides, how unlike would fuch a trial be to those ordained by God ? The latter arife from paffions planted in our nature for the most valuable purposes, and from the most useful and neceffary relations of life. But our adversaries suppose, miracles may be atchieved with no other view, than as mere matter of trial to mankind: which is repugnant to all our knowledge of

Digitized by Google

* See ch. 2, fect. 2.

.

i.

ń

2.

A

e,

e.

Ľ

)ľ

۵,

21

.

74

of the divine difpenfations. Not to obferve, that errors inforced by miracles, would, very frequently at leaft, conftitute a trial rather of the understanding, than of the heart; and in this refpect likewife, it would differ from those to which God has subjected mankind.

To convince us more fully, that no miracles can ever accompany a falfe doctrine, merely for the trial of mankind; I would observe, that they are not capable of answering this end, upon the principles of those by whom it is affigned. Were a falle doctrine to be attested by miracles; it must be afferted, either that the falfhood of it was difcerned, or that it was not. If the falfhood of the doctrine was difcerned, and it was at the fame time known, that the miracles attefting it might and must be performed by fome evil agent : in this cafe, where would be the trial ? The miracles, it would be allowed, were no evidence of the truth or divinity of the doctrine; and contained no recommendation of it, or motive to embrace it; nay, they could only ferve to furnish an invincible prejudice against it, on account of the known malevolence of their author. If, on the other hand, the falfehood of the doctrine was not and could not be difcerned; the miracles attending it being confidered only as proofs of the interpolition of fome fuperior being, the mind must be thrown into a state of perplexity and fuspence about the author of the works, and remain void of all inducement either to embrace or reject the doctrine. And confequently here also there would be no trial at all. We are never more in danger of charging God foolifhly, than when

3

2

ŝ

d

1

7

a

Ľ

đ

7

d,

đ

12

P

œ

D.

Ċ

į

t

when we judge of him, not by what he has done, but by what we prefume it becomes him to do. It might convince us, how little a way bare speculation can carry us in all refearches into the nature and government of God, to find the ftrongest minds, when trusting to speculation alone, ascribing to him unworthy measures, and inventing defigns and ends for them, which they are not adapted to answer. The very scheme which affigns the trial of mankind, as the end of God's permitting miracles to be performed in confirmation of error, does itfelf fhew, it could not be promoted by them. Now, whoever calls upon us to believe, that miracles may be wrought without any neceffity, and even without any use, demands our affent to what contradicts all our ideas of divine wildom, and the whole course of the divine dispensations, as well as the feveral reafons before urged to shew, that no variations from the established laws of nature can take place, except when they are indifpenfably neceffary to promote the most important purpofes of God's administration.

Though miracles wrought in fupport of error, according to the idea fome have formed of thefe works, would not conflitute any trial of mankind; yet, if we confider them in their true light, they carry fo much weight and authority with them, as most powerfully and effectually to recommend to the belief of mankind the doctrine which they attest. And, confequently, were they to accompany error, they could not fail, in very many instances, of procuring it credit; as we endeavoured to shew at the beginning of the fection. In order to confirm what was there advanced, it is only only neceffary to add, that, in this cafe, the confideration of the doctrine which the miracles attested, could not univerfally fecure men from deception. Man is a creature liable to error, and his judgment (eafily imposed upon by specious appearances) often pronounces that to be reafonable which is not fo. And even when a doctrine appears doubtful, or ftrongly fuspicious, mankind are more ready to call in question their own reasonings concerning it, than to dispute the authority of the miracles which are thought to recommend it. Innumerable cafes there are, in which human reason, in its most improved state, is unable to form any judgment concerning the probability or improbability of a divine interpolition to confirm particular doctrines. Do not the most learned, and even the wifest of mankind, differ widely concerning the reasonableness of certain opinions? Nay, what contrary cenfures do they pass upon them? Is there a fect of Christians which does not represent the diftinguishing tenets of all the other fects as unworthy of God, however credible they appear to those who hold them? How then can the bulk of mankind, the most ignorant and illiterate, and those in particular who have been educated in all the darkness of idolatry; how can they in every cafe judge with certainty, whether a doctrine be worthy a divine interpolition, or detect the falsehood of it, when it brings the testimonial of miracles?

-6

Let us put a cafe the most favourable of any to those whom we here oppose. They affirm, "That "if the most numerous and illustrious miracles were "performed in support of idolatry, we ought to dif-"regard r¢.

3

1

工力

3

1

Π,

d

Ż

đ

21

đ

'n

1

1

l

þŗ

6 k

ĩ

ł

f,

Ø

" regard them; that the doctrine being false, the " works could not be divine." Let us then fuppofe, that fuch miracles were actually wrought for the purpole here affigned, the confirmation of idolatry, in the fense they imagine it to have been practifed by many in the Pagan world, that is, in confirmation of the worship of certain powerful beings, to whom the government of particular parts of nature was delegated by the fupreme Divinity. From what was observed above *, it appears, that had miracles been performed among the Heathens, these works must, by their own natural influence, have inflamed their devotion towards the reputed authors of them. And in farther justification of their idolatry, they might be ready to plead, " That the honour paid to inferior deities was " warranted by the miracles which they performed ; " becaufe fuch changes in the order of nature could " not take place, but by the appointment of the great " Lord of nature, and because they were in them-" felves difplays of that authority and dominion over " mankind with which he he had invested them : " and confequently that difowning their authority, " and refusing them their due homage, was acting " contrary to the will of the fupreme Being, and to " the truth of things; refufing to ackowledge those " inferior deities to be, what they really were, our " divinely appointed governors and guardians." lf a Heathen offered this plea, the validity of which, or of one very fimilar to it, feems to be admitted in Scripture;

Digitized by Google

* Ch. 2. feet. 4. p. 65.

77

Scripture *; it would be difficult to convince him of the weaknefs of it, efpecially as it gave a fanction to all his ftrongeft prejudices and inclinations †. Now if in a cafe thought to be fo plain, and certainly of the first importance, mankind are liable to delusion; in how many thousand instances besides would they not be open to it, if miracles were performed to give a fanction to impositure ?

And even supposing the doctrine attested by miracles, to be immoral, or favourable to our corrupt paffions; this confideration would indeed awaken the caution and prejudice of a few good men against it; but would only fo much the more ftrongly recommend it to the affection of the greatest part of mankind. When I confider upon what accounts the Heathen world did not like to retain the true God in their knowledge, what vices they afcribed to their chief divinities, what flagrant immoralities they practifed as rites of religion, even without any fuch fanction as that of miracles : when I farther reflect, how often the moral precepts of the Gofpel have been cenfured as impracticable, and their strict purity urged as an objection against their divinity; and that even Christians themselves, of all denominations, are continually corrupting the fanctity of their religion, or relaxing its rigour, and ftriving, under different pretences, to bring it nearer to the level of human frail-

ty :

* If. xli. 21-23. cited below, ch. 3. fect. 2.

+ What is here offered to fhew, that miracles would have rivetted Pagans in their idolatry; is apparently true with refpect to Papi/s, were fuch works to be performed by them.

ŧ

1

L

ĸ

D

é

ł

3 à li

É

r

Ľ

đ

đ

8 iä

3 ũ

đ

1

ty: I cannot help being of opinion, that a doctrine mild and gentle to mens favourite paffions and purfuits, if it was supported by miracles, would be a temptation too strong for human nature to resist, and fuch as God therefore will never suffer it to be exposed to.

A very learned writer, who has done fingular fervice to the caule of religion, has afferted, " Suppof-" ing that the miracles pretended in favour of Pa-" ganifm were all real miracles, yet as they lead men " to a corrupt religion and idolatrous worship, no " reverence, no regard is to be paid to them. "" The worship which men pay to God, will ever be fuitable to the ideas they form concerning his nature. The most immoral rites of Pagan devotion were conformable to the character of the objects of that devotion. And while men entertain corrupt notions of their gods, they are not likely to difcern the abfurdity of a corrupt religion. And therefore miracles performed in support of it, would strengthen, and (in their opinion, at least) justify their attachment to it. In a word, whoever confiders the true nature of miracles, the power which they necessarily imply, and the forcible impressions they make on the human heart, together with the real character of mankind, will hardly deny, that, if they were wrought to give evidence to falfehood, they would unavoidably, in numberlefs inftances, procure it credit; especially if he farther takes takes into the account, the understanding and fagacity ascribed to created spirits. We are indeed exposed to the danger of delusion by the artifices of men. Nevertheless, against human crast, human caution is a fufficient fecurity: but men are not a match for superior beings.

* Dr. Newton's Differtations on the Prophecies, V. 2. p. 275. Dr. Clarke likewife had advanced the fame doctrine, V. 2. p. 699, 700, 702. fol. edit.

. 79

Now if God's allowing to evil fpirits the liberty of working miracles in confirmation of falfe doctrines, would neceffarily fubject mankind to great delution : will it not follow from hence, that he cannot have granted them any fuch liberty? This confequence will be allowed by those, who think honourably of the divine government. Who, without being compelled by fuch evidence as cannot be refifted, would represent the Deity as placing his rational creatures, even those who with upright hearts were endeavouring to learn his will, under a dispensation, which, without any fault of theirs, would promote their deception, in matters which concerned their moral conduct, and their eternal happiness? Such a dispensation as this feems to be utterly inconfistent with God's wifdom and goodnefs, with his effential rectitude, and love of righteousness and truth, and with all the nobleft perfections of his nature. If God does not, and indeed, (for the reasons affigned above *,) cannot, juffer the order of the natural world to be diffurbed at the will of created agents at any other time; can it be thought, that he will permit and employ them to make this miraculous difturbance, merely to promote a farther and much greater evil, the delufion, depravity vity and mifery of the moral world? Scarce is it poffible for us, to diffonour the deity more, than by fo groundlefs and injurious an imputation. If falfehood and vice are objects of God's difapprobation, he must have referved in his own hands the power of working miracles. Now, it is not more impossible, that this prerogative of God should be usually violence; than that it should be voluntarily refigned and profituted to unworthy purpose.

* Ch. 1. fect. 2. p. 18. & fect. 3. p. 58.

SECT. VI.

If miracles may be performed without a divine interpolition, and in support of falsebood; they cannot be authentic credentials of a divine million, and criterions of truth.

Ĺ

è

0

1

t

IT is a thing too obvious to require any laboured argument, that if miracles, in themfelves, are evidences only of the interpolition of fome fuperior beings, not of God more than any other; they can never be, in themfelves, a certain criterion of a perfon's being fent of God. "You could not know I " came from, and was fent by fuch a prince, by " my bringing his feal along with me, if other " people had the fame feal, and would lend it to o-" thers to use as they faw fit +." If you cannot point out, with clearnels and certainty, the specific difference between those miracles which are peculiar to F God, + Fleetwood's Effay on Miracles, p. 6, 7.

8 I

God, and those which the devil can either perform or imitate, you will be in perpetual danger of miftaking the one for the other *. Accordingly we find Christians themselves, from the earliest ages down to the prefent, disparaging the evidence of mere miracles, as doubtful and uncertain; cautioning the world against receiving doctrines as true and divine, upon the bare attestation of these works, and censuring a faith founded upon them as manifestly rash and groundless +. Can it then be matter of furprize to us, that unbelievers fhould treat miracles with very little reverence, and except to the evidence arising from them? It has long provoked their fcorn and indignation, to have that offered them as a valid proof of the truth, which equally attefts falfehood; to fee the very * Dr. Prideaux in his letter to the Deifts, p. 206, and many others have undertaken to fhew, what fort of miracles the devil may perform or imitate. The tafk however feems to have been too hard for them; which it might well be, if it be true, as Dr. Clarke and others tell us, that there is no knowing how far the power of created fpirits, good and evil, may extend. Why then do thefe writers undertake to determine the limits of their power? See Dr. Clarke, V. 2. p. 696, &cc.

+ Temeratiam Plane. Tertullian in Marc. 3.,2. Origen, in his anfwer to Celfus, 1. 3. p. 124, fpeaks of prophecies and fupernatural cures, as things of an indifferent nature. And Jerome, or whoever is the author of the Breviary upon the Pfalter, apud Hieron. T. 2. p. 334, 335, makes no difficulty of allowing to Porphyry, that the magicians of Egypt, Apollonius, and an infinite number of other perfons, wrought miracles. Non eft autem grande facere figna, feems to have been the principle common both to Porphyry and Jerome.

82.

tform

f nď.

ie fini

)wn ti

min

work

upol

lurin

lb ød

toB

y litte

g fron

india

oofø

lee b

YC)

and 🍽 cles B cems 3

it at

o k∎o≠ il, m ternix

ئىنى , ئار igenji

and is

And k

he Pin

ultys

polloer iracle

een i<sup>y</sup>

very fame works ufed to recommend fome to their regard as divine meffengers, and to difgrace others as magicians*. For, I think, there is hardly a fingle miracle, either in the Old or New Teftament, which Chriftians t have not thought they could parallel with fome fimilar miracle amongst the Pagans. There are two cafes, however, in which miracles are confidered as evidences of a divine mission, by fome who plead, that fuch works may, on other occasions, be performed without the order of God.

I. It is urged, " that in cafe of a contell between " two opposite parties working miracles for victory; " the party which works the moft and greateft mira-" cles, may reasonably be supposed to be affissed by " God; and therefore that his doctrine should be re-" ceived as divine." To this we answer, 1/t, That if supernatural operations were brought to support opposite missions, it would be difficult to determine which of them required the greater degrees of power. Scarce, perhaps, would any two perfons pronounce the source of  $F_2$  the

* It was this which afforded Celfus fuch matter of infult and triumph, Tus, in i systexion, ind two advant leven the stor, rise di ydnras inyfilat. Celfus apud Origin. contra Celf. 1. 2. p. 93. This it is that feems to have created the ftrongeft prejudice in Mr. Rouffeau against miracles: " Can it be imagined," fays he, " that God uses the fame means to instruct men, as he knows " the devil will use to deceive them ?" Lettres ecrites de la Montagne, p. 104.

‡ This talk was undertaken by the learned Huetius, in his Quæstiones Alnetanz.

Digitized by Google

83

the traders out of the temple, is called by St. Jerome *, the most wonderful of all the miracles which Jefus performed : and yet a very learned modern + fcarce allows it to be any miracle at all. To change the form of a creature, is pronounced by Dr. Lightfoot 1 the greatest miracle; and he applies the observation to that wrought at Cana: but Dr. Lardner || calls it, " one of the least miracles any where ascribed to " Christ." How can miracles of a different kind be brought into a comparison with each other? Were this difficulty overcome, there still remains a greater. For, 2dly; It would be impoffible to fhew, on the principles we are here examining, that those miracles which carried marks of a juperior power were really The most learned Dr. Clarke seems indeed divine. to have thought §, that where juperior power appeared, " there it was neceffarily to be believed, that the " commiffion was truly from God;" and the ingenious and acute Bishop Sherlock affirms ¶, " that mi-" racles are an immediate and direct proof of what " they are brought to affert, the fupremacy of God : "For, when the fingle question is, who is the " Mightiest, must it not be decided in his favour " who vifibly exerts the greatest acts of power?"

But

* In Matt. tom. 9. p. 31. ed. Baf. 1516.

+ The miracles of Jefus vindicated, by Dr. Pearce, p. 26.

Digitized by Google

‡ V. 1. p. 504.

|| Vindication, p. 26.

§ Serm. Vol. 2. p. 700.

¶ Discourfes, V. 1. p. 285.

But if created spirits of very different ranks and orders, are at liberty to work miracles without any commission from God; who can determine the limits of their respective capacities, and take upon him to fay, how far the power of the highest created spirit may extend? Dr. Clarke tells us *, " that (un-" lefs we knew the limit of communicable and incommu-" nicable power, we can hardly affirm with any cer-" tainty, that any particular effect, how great or mi-" raculous foever it may feem to us, is beyond the " power of all created beings in the universe to have " produced." I admit, that in cafe of fuch a contest as is fuppofed above, the party which performs the most and greatest miracles is fuperior to the opposite. But I am not able to difcern, how this fuperiority of the one to the other necessarily proves an infinity of power, or an absolute fupremacy over all other beings. On the principles of Dr. Clarke, the miracles on both fides, feparately confidered, might be performed by beings inferior to God, and are proofs only of the interpolition of fome invilible agents superior to man. How then can the circumstance of their being performed in a contest for victory, demonstrate that they could have no other author than God ? 3dly; On the contrary, this circumstance would incline us to believe, that both parties were affilted only by created intelligences, fuperior to one another in power: for it feems much more likely, that there fhould be a contention for power and supremacy between different F<sub>3</sub> created

* V. 2. p. 697.

t

Ĺ

l

k

đ

ġ

i

đ

đ

ġ

۵

1

ł

X

ċ

ß

ľ

š

$

created agents, than between any creature and his omnipotent Creator. With whom would the almighty Maker and Sovereign of the universe deign to enter into a contest? And superior spirits, (as Dr. Clarke * himfelf allows) " could not poffibly be " fo abfurdly ignorant, as to imagine that finite could " prevail by force against infinite, or not know that " the Almighty could, if he pleafed, annihilate them " fwift as thought." From hence it feems to me to follow, that if oppofite miffions were supported by miracles, the fupreme Being could have no concern in the difpute. 4thly; According to the rule of judging concerning the divinity of miracles, here laid down; these works will, at different times, both prove and difprove the divine commission of their performer. While the contest is continued between two oppofite parties working miracles for victory; he who to-day, by working more and greater miracles than his rival, is received as a divine meffenger, must be rejected as an impostor to-morrow, if his rival should then exceed him in the number and greatness of his At the next trial, however, he may exmiracles. ceed his rival, recover the advantage he loft, and from being an impostor, become again a divine mes-How long the contest may last, none can fenger. tell; but every one may fee, that there can be no force in that proof, which alternately establishes and destroys opposite claims. In such a supposed contest, each of the miracles, in itself confidered; is of no value :

* Sermons, V. 1. p. 60. folio ed. & p. 587.

Digitized by Google

value: and add as many of these ciphers together as you please, they will be but cyphers still.

1

h

12

1Z

2

峾

4

11

۵

ż

)F

Ċ.

۲.

b

đ

¥

5

5 ė

z

Ľ

6 ĺ

٥.

ć

II. Those Christians * who are of opinion that miracles may be wrought by inferior beings, do neverthelefs afcribe fuch to God, as are performed for an end not unworthy of him. " Though the works," fay they, " do neceffarily prove nothing more than " the interpolition of fome fuperior being; yet the " nature of the doctrine will enable us to determine " who that being is: and if the doctrine has a ten-" dency to promote piety and virtue, or be only in-" different in itfelf, and not absolutely inconfistent " with these ends; then the miracles, and confe-" quently the doctrine, must be divine: for should God " in fuch cafes as thefe, permit evil fpirits to work mi-" racles and impose upon men, the error would be ab-" folutely invincible; and that would in all refpects be " the very fame thing, as if God worked the miracles " to deceive men himfelf." This reafoning feems liable to feveral objections. Why should the mere indifference of the doctrine engage us to ascribe the miracles to God, rather than to other fuperior fpirits fuppofed capable of performing them? Is it not more honourable to the Deity to fuppofe, that he will not atteft a doctrine merely indifferent in itfelf? It is what his wifdom will not permit. With regard to doctrines of a moral or useful tendency; it is not in all cafes easy for the bulk of mankind, or even for the wife and learned, to form a certain judgment con-F 4 cerning

* Dr. Clarke, Vol. 2. p. 700. Dr. Chandler, and others.

cerning them. What to men appeared to have a tendency to promote virtue and happines; superior beings, who discerned its remotest effects, might know to be a curfe rather than a bleffing, and give it countenance from a motive of malevolence. On the other hand, a doctrine really fubfervient to the caufe of piety and virtue, men might judge to be prejudicial to it. And were the fanctity of the doctrine ever fo evident, it would not (on the principles of those with whom we are here arguing) certainly follow from hence, that the miracles recommending it were wrought by God; inafmuch as other beings, from motives unknown to us, might interest themfelves in favour of fuch a doctrine. Concerning none but the divine Being can it be demonstrated, that he is abfolutely incapable of deceiving or being deceived. Nor is there any reason to plead, " that " if miracles were performed by evil fpirits in fup-" port of a docirine good or innocent, mankind " would be neceffarily deluded into a belief of its di-" vine original;" unlefs it be allowed that miracles bear upon themfelves evident and certain characters of divinity. But those who make this plea, suppose it to be a thing known and certain, that no miracles whatever do neceffarily argue a divine interpolition. Were I to fee miracles performed in favour of all forts of doctrines, I would not afcribe any of them to God: I should be unable to perfuade myself, that infinite wildom employed any works as the diftinguishing teft of his own extraordinary interpolition, which may be performed by inferior beings; or that the Deity would use that as a feal of truth, which the devil devil uses to gain credit to imposture. And therefore if miracles may be performed by created agents of different and opposite characters, and in support of falsehood as well as truth; I am not able to perceive, how any doctrine can be proved by miracles *, or at least any such doctrine as wants the attestation of these works.

R.

)

h

b

x

k

J

Ŋ

ş

9

ß,

Ċ

D,

1

ф а

Ē

đ

Ľ,

ľ

)i

1

ţ,

۵

b

Ċ,

đ

It is neceffary to obferve farther, that the making the doctrine the teft of the divinity of the miracles, is, to make the doctrine the rule of judging concerning the miracle, not the miracle the rule of judging concerning the doctrine. The proper and immediate defign of miracles is, to establish fome truth unknown before, and fuch as is not demonstrable by reason, or capable of other evidence besides that of miracles; to prove, for example, the mission of the prophet by whom they were performed, and the divine

* In confirmation of what is urged above to thew, that, on the principle maintained in the objection we are now examining, no doctrine whatever can be proved to come from God by miracles; it may be obferved, that if the doctrine be fuch, as natural reason can clearly and certainly discover to be true; the miracles are unneceffary and fuperfluous, and for that reafon cannot be divine. And if the doctrine be fuch as reason can clearly prove to be false; it will be fill more impossible to ascribe the miracles to God. If the dostrine be doubtful, and natural reason be unable to determine whether it be true or false; it must be equally doubtful who the author of the miracles is. But it is sufficient to have thewn, that, if miracles are not peculiar to God, no doctrine that wants the attestation of these works, can be proved by them.

89

vine original of his meffage or doctrine, and to engage men to receive and comply with it, however contrary it may be to their prejudices and paffions. But according to fome learned men, the doctrine must first be examined without passion or prejudice, and then employed to prove the divinity of the miracles. But is not this repugnant to the proper use and intention of miracles? It is making the whole force of the proof, to depend upon the doctrine to be proved. It is of importance to add, that miracles are intended more especially for the conviction of the ignorant and unlearned, who are eafily imposed upon by the fophiftry of fcience, and the fpecious difguifes of error, as well as utterly difgualified to determine by abstract reasonings concerning the absolute necesfity, or the fitnels and propriety, of fpecial divine interpofitions. It is neceffary therefore that miracles, when they are offered as evidences of a divine commission, should contain in their own nature, a clear demonstrative proof of their divine original: for otherwife their fpecial defign could not be answered. It is quite unnatural to fuppofe, that the doctrine must first establish the divinity of the miracles, before the miracles can atteft the divinity of the doctrine; and it is abfurd to expect that a new revelation and offenfive truths, (which are not received without re-Iuctance, even where there is a prior conviction of the divinity of the miracles attefting them,) should themfelves effectually engage men to afcribe those works to God, which might be performed by numberlefs other invifible agents.

Now, can it be imagined, that God will ever allow fuperior fuperior beings to work miracles in fupport of falfehood; if hereby he would deftroy the proof from thefe works of his own immediate interposition, and put it out of his own power to employ them as certain credentials of a divine mission? Miracles (under which term I comprehend those of knowledge as well as power) being the only * mean, whereby God can affure the world of the truth of a new revelation, he must have referved the use of it to himself alone, without ever parting with it to ferve the purposes of his rivals and opposers.

ł.

Ł

ġ.

İ

1

ġ

6

Æ

a

ĺ

ť.

Ľ

ſ

ę,

3

ñ

Ű.

Ņ.

$

Ľ

With regard to the rule, of making miracles then a proof of the divine original of the doctrine, when the works difplay a fuperiority of power, and when the doctrine is either fubfervient to, or not inconfiftent with, piety and virtue; it may be farther obferved, that were this rule true in general, it could not be applied to the cafe either of Judaifm or Chriftianity; if it fhould appear, that the great founders of both those religions have established rules directly opposite to this, and represented miracles as abfolute, not as conditional proofs of a doctrine's coming from God. And this is the point which comes next under confideration.

But before we proceed farther, it may not be improper to recapitulate what has been already offered from reason, to shew that miracles can never be performed without a divine interposition. Reason, it has been observed, makes known to us but one almighty mighty being, who is at liberty to act every where, and in what manner he pleafes, and whofe omnipotence is the only adequate cause, we are capable of discovering in the whole compass of existence, of those effects which are called miraculous. To him therefore it is most natural to ascribe them. The beft arguments which reason can employ to prove the existence of fuperior created intelligences, do much more ftrongly prove, that they can act only within that particular sphere appointed them by their Creator. 'It has likewife been shewn, that the observation and experience of all ages are a full demonstration that they are not at liberty to perform miracles in this lower world; no fuch works having ever been performed in it, but fuch as may be fitly afcribed to God. The laws of nature being the established rules of the divine government, and effential to the order and happiness of the world; it feems very unreasonable to suppose, that God should delegate to any of his creatures a power of fuperfeding or controuling these laws. Miracles are famples of dominion over them, and argue the immediate interpolition and authority of that great Being by whom they were at first ordained. Deists more especially, who deny the existence both of angels and devils, must allow, that if any miracles are performed, they can have none but God for their author, and that the fettled course of things is unalterable but by his immediate will. Were inferior beings at liberty to difturb the wife order of nature, we should lose our best evidence of God's existence and providence; and the very foundation of all the homage he claims would be overturned.

* See below, ch. 5.

91 ·

t.

ĸ

ť

αĺ

16

21.

1

DR

turned. The opinion we are here opposing has in all ages been fatal to true piety, and given birth to endless superstitions and idolatries. And did superior beings really posses the miraculous powers ascribed to them; the exercise of those powers by good and evil agents, would either expose mankind to neceffary and invincible error, or entirely destroy the credit and use of miracles under the idea of criterions of truth, and authentic credentials of a divine mission.

CHAP.

94

CHAP. III.

ARGUMENTS FROM REVELATION, TO PROVE THAT MIRACLES ARE, IN THEMSELVES, CERTAIN EVI-DENCES OF A DIVINE INTERPOSITION.

T is neceffary on this occasion, to appeal to the facred writings; not merely for the conviction of those who acknowledge their divine authority. though they miltake the meaning of many paffages relative to our prefent inquiry; but also to convince those, who, denying their authority, are ready to avail themfelves of the mifinterpretations of the former, in fubverting the foundation on which their authority refts. I will endeavour to fhew, that the Scriptures both of the Old and New Testament (strictly corresponding with right reason) always reprefent miracles as the peculiar works of God; and never attribute them to any other beings, unlefs when acting by his immediate commission. The fubiect must be confidered in its full extent; and comprehends under it the following topics, which demand a close and candid examination.

SECT. I.

The view which the Scripture gives us of good angels, of the devil and his angels, as alfo of the fouls of departed men; inconfiftent with their liberty of working miracles.

TITH regard to good angels; the Scripture I. never reprefents them as capable of working miracles at their own pleafure, or as invefted with any dominion over mankind. Very frei quent mention indeed is made of angels, either as the inftruments or fymbols of an extraordinary pro-When Jacob * in a dream faw a ladder, vidence. reaching from earth to heaven, on which the angels of God feemed to afcend and defcend, and on the top of which the divine glory itself appeared; this vision, perhaps, was defigned only as a fymbol or figurative representation of God's special care of Jacob, and readine's to interpole at all times for his protection. It is in allufion to this vision, that our Saviour expresses himself, when he foretold to Nathaniel that furprizing train of miracles which attended his ministry +; " From this time ‡ you shall fee hea-" ven * Gen. xxviii. 12.

+ John i. 51. That Chrift here foretels his miracles, and not the vifible afcent and defcent of angels upon him during his miniftry, is evident from hence, that the prophecy was not accomplifhed in this latter fense of it.

Digitized by Google

$ Απ' αετι.

ć

96

" ven open, and the angels of God ascending and " defcending upon the Son of man." Now, inafmuch as the miracles of Chrift are elsewhere ascribed, not to angels, but to God*; the former cannot be regarded as the proper authors of these works; and our Saviour might mean only to affirm, that his mi-. racles would be fenfible difplays of the divine power in his favour, or open proofs of an immediate intercourfe between heaven and earth. We do not however deny, that Chrift might employ angels in executing his orders, and particularly in working miracles: for they are all made fubject to him. Neverthelefs, it does not appear from the Scriptures, that they can perform miracles of themfelves, and without an immediate divine commission. Ou the contrary, according to the Scripture account of them, if they bring any meffages to men, they first receive them from God; if they controul the course of nature, it is by authority from the Lord of nature; and if they interpole at all in the affairs of our fystem, it is not as they fee fit themfelves, but according to the command of Cod, as the ministers of his will, which they execute as punctually as those passive inftruments of his providence, the luminaries of heaven, and the elements of nature +. The word, angel or meffenger, denotes only one employed in the execution of fome commission. Hence it is applied, not merely to intelligent * See below, fect. 6.

+ Pl. xviii. 9, 10. Pl. lxviii. 17. Pl. ciii. 20, 21. Il. vi. 1, &c. Dan. vii. 9. Matt. xviii. 10. Hcb. i. 14. ch. ii. 5. Rev. v. 13. ch. vii. 11. ch. xix. 10.

telligent being's acting by the order of God, but even to the inanimate parts of the creation, which he employs as the inftruments of his government. The Pfalmift, when celebrating the empire of God over the material world, fays, "He maketh the winds " his angels or meffengers, and lightnings his mi-" nifters \*. For fire and hail, fnow and vapour, and " ftormy winds, fulfil God's word  $\dagger$ ." But all that G is

• This is the true rendering of Pf. civ. 4. (Compare Exod. ix. 23, 24. Pf. 1xxviii. 48, 49.) Nor is it certain, that thefe words are applied Heb. i. 7. to intelligent beings; as the apoftle feems to have had no other view in citing them, than to obferve, that the very name of angels (however applied) imported miniflry and fubjection; whereas that of Son implied authority and dominion. Very probably the Scripture may reprefent the most active parts of nature as God's angels, in oppofition to the Heathens, who conceived of them as deities. See below, ch. iii. fect. 2.

i

Ç

ĩ

ţ,

ł

t

1

+ Pf. cxlviii. 8. According to this general import of the word angel, many learned writers understand it in the following and other passages of Scripture. "The angel of the Lord finiting Herod," they think is explained in the text itself of an extraordinary diflemper inflicted by God, Acts xii. 23. God threatened Sennacherib, "that he would fend a blass upon him," a pestilential blass, or burning wind, which destroyed his army; and this being done under the direction of God, and in execution of his designs, the blass or wind is called the angel, the messenger and fervant of God, 2 Kings xii. 6, 7. ch. xix. 35. "God's fending an angel to Jerusalem to destroy it," feems only another form of expression for "his fending a pestilence upon Israel," I Chron. xxi. 14, 15. 2 Sam. xxiv. 15, 16. We read Exod. ix. 23, 24. that the Lord "fent upon the Egyptians thunder and hail and fire:" and the Pfalmist speaking is of importance here to obferve, is, that the Scripture teaches us, that angels, of whatever dignity, are only ministring spirits, the fervants of Jehovah, "do-"ing his commandments, and hearkening to the "voice of his word," without having themselves any power over mankind, or over those laws by which the fystem to which we belong is governed.

97

II. We are next to enquire, whether the Scripture afcribes the power of performing miracles to the devil and his angels. It is generally fuppofed, that thefe wicked fpirits were originally inhabitants of the celeftial regions, and equal in rank and dignity with those who preferred their innocence. Now, fuppofing this to be the cafe; yet, if even good angels, who continue in a ftate of favour with God, have no power of working miracles at their own pleafure, or any dominion over mankind, (as we endeavoured to fhew under the preceding article;) what reafon can there be for afcribing fuch dominion and power to evil angels, who are fallen under the divine displeasure? Would the Deity, unchangeable as he is in rectitude and justice, reward their difobedience, by enlarging their of thefe judgments, fays, "God fent evil angels amongft them." Pf. 1xxviii. 48, 49. See Mr. Lowman's three Tracts, p. 60—74. On the other hand, it may be alledged, that the facred writers feem to have thought, that God adminiftered a particular providence by the inftrumentality of his angels; and confequently in defcribing the effects of a fpecial divine interpolition, would very naturally make mention of the agency of those ministring fpirits, much in the fame manner as is done in the passages here cited.

98

their fphere of action, and advancing them to new dominion over his own creation, fuch as is denied to the highest archangel? Is the latter only a ministring fpirit, while the former reign as fovereigns over nature, as fellow-fovereigns with the eternal God? The apostles * Peter and Jude speak a very different language, when they tell us, that inafmuch as the angels " did not keep their principality +, but deferted their " own habitation, God did not fpare them, but caft " them down to Tartarus ‡, and (there) referves them " in everlasting (or perpetual) chains, under dark-" nefs, to the judgment of the great day." If Peter and Jude are here speaking of superior spirits; it is evident, that even prior to their fall, they did not enjoy the liberty of a boundlefs range, but had a certain limited fphere of action affigned them, or their proper babitation : which we have flewn to be highly probable from reason ||. And in their present state, they are fubjected to new reftraints, like prifoners confined for their crimes, in a doleful dungeon, where they remain in fafe cuftody, till they are brought forth to an ignominious execution. The place of their confinement is called Tartarus; by which fome understand G 2 a deep

Digitized by Google

* 2 Pet. ii. 4. Jude 6.

- + The Eauton dexin, Jude 6.
- ‡ Taelagúsas.

È

T.

ŝ

ĸ,

17

ï

Ň

.

1

ť

t

)

1

|| Ch. 2. § 1.

100

a deep gulf under the earth *, and others the dark air + near the earth: but whatever place it refers to, they can have no dominion there; it is not their kingdom, but their prison, their constant and perpetual prifon. How inconfistent is this representation of their cafe, with their sharing with God the empire of the world, and controuling the laws of nature and providence ! Nor does the Scripture on any occafion contradict this reprefentation: it never ascribes to the devil the ability of revealing fecrets, foretelling future events, or working miracles; never guards mankind against being deceived by the outward effects either of his miraculous power or infpiration; neceffary as fuch a caution would have been, had he been able to inspire prophecies and work miracles; and earnestly as it warns us against a less danger, the pretences of men to divine miracles and infpiration, when they were not fent and affifted by God.

It is, indeed, urged by fome ‡, that the Scripture reprefents evil fpirits as " prefiding over diffinct re-" gions, by the direction of Satan their prince." In proof of this affertion, we are referred to that paffage in * This feems to be the first import of the word. Homer, Il. 8. l. 13, 14. Hefiod. Theogon. l. 119, 718. Plato in Phædone, p. 399. ed. Ficini. Virg. Æn. 6. l. 577.

+ Confult the commentators on 2 Pet. ii. 4. Ephef. ii. 2. ch. vi. 12.

‡ Dr. Doddridge's Fam. Expof. V. i. p. 427, 2d ed. note f. on Luke viii. 31.

Digitized by Google

.....

in the book of Daniel*, where mention is made of Gabriel's being oppofed by the princes of the kingdom of Persia, and of his fighting the prince of Per-It is not the defign of this vision, to affert the fia. prefidency even of good angels, (who at most only execute the divine orders;) but to reprefent the peculiar providence which God exercifed over the Jewish nation, and his care to frustrate the councils of their . enemies. As to evil fpirits, there is here no reference to them. For by the princes of the kingdom of Perfia, the prophet intends the nobles of that kingdom, and especially Cambyses, the fon of Cyrus, who, in his father's absence, stopt the execution of his decrees, and forbad the building of the temple +. It is the more reasonable to understand this passage, of fome opposition against the Jews in the court of Perfia, by the prince and fome of the nobility; inafmuch as the prince of Grecia mentioned in the very fame passage, cannot fo well be referred to an angel or evil fpirit, as to Alexander the Great, who overturned the empire of Perfia : he and his fucceffors being the main fubject of the following prophecy.

Some learned writers afcribe to the devil a power " of changing the conftitution of the air  $\ddagger$ ." This element " is fo wonderfully contrived as at one and " the fame time to fupport clouds for rain, to afford " winds for health and traffick, to be proper for the G<sub>3</sub> " breath

* Ch. x. 13, 20.

5

z

u Uk

)T.

Ő.

ġ

Ż

ţi.

'n

E

ĸ

Ę

+ See the Affembly's Annotations in loc.

‡ Dr. Macknight's Truth of the Gospel History, p. 173.

102

" breath of animals by its fpring, for caufing founds " by its motion, for transmitting light by its trans-" parency *." And therefore if the devil can change the conftitution of this element, on which the material, the vegetable, and the animal creation abfolutely depend; this world is in a flate of perfect fubjection to him; and inftead of being a prifoner in Tartarus, he is the fovereign of nature. It has been a prevailing opinion amongst Christians, that the devil raises ftorms, and lays them; in direct contradiction to the facred Scriptures, which reprefent the winds and waves as fubject to the controul of God alone +, and every change of their natural state as the certain evidence of his peculiar interpofition, particularly the miraculous ftorm of thunder and hail in Egypt 1, the dividing the Red Sea by the rod of Mofes ||, and Christ's calming the winds and waves upon the lake of Gennefaret §. God interpofes to controul the elements very rarely, and only on great and extraordinary occasions: can we then believe that the devil, and forcerers by his affiftance, controul them at pleafure every day? So strange a doctrine requires fome clearer

* Dr. Clarke's Sermons, vol. 1. p. 5.

† See Pf. 1xv. 7. Pf. cxxxv. 7. Pf. cxlvii. 18. Prov. xxx. 4. If. xxvii. 8. Jerem. x. 13. Amos iv. 13. Job xxxvii. 10, 11.

Digitized by Google

‡ Exod. ix. 27-29. Compare If. xi. 15.

|| Exod. xiv. 15.

§ Mark iv. 41. Matt. xiv. 33.

clearer proof, than the mention made by St. Paul, of It is evi-" the prince of the power of the air *." dent in general, that the apostle is describing, not the natural, but moral state of the world. Who the perfon here referred to is, there may be fome difficulty to determine. If St. Paul refers to " the prince of the Heathen deities," who were thought to have their station in the higher regions of the air +; he could not allow their having any real dominion over the aerial regions, and must be understood as reproaching the gross stupidity of idolaters, in being as ftrongly actuated by their regard to these idols, as if they had been powerful divinities. The very fcope and defign of this passage, as well as the principles which the apostle avows on other occasions, are fufficient to convince us, that he could only intend to describe the Heathen deities by their usual appellations, without allowing their claims. Suppose the apostle, to make the Ephesians ashamed of their former debaucheries, had reproached them with having been the votaries of the god Bacchus, or the goddess Venus: who would have inferred from this language, that he believed Venus or Bacchus to be powerful divinities? Our Saviour himfelf uses language fimilar to this, when he fpeaks of mens ferving Mammon, the god of riches. If (as is more ge-G 4 nerally nerally and probably supposed) St. Paul refers to the devil, or any fpirit notorious for his difaffection to God, and for having feduced others from their allegiance; he defigned to upbraid the world with following fuch a leader and example, who was confidered by the Jews as the prince or chief of all those wicked fpirits, who were believed to have their refidence in the air *. The apoftle is here reminding the Ephefians of their character and state before their conversion to the Christian faith: " In time past ye " walked according to the courfe of this world," (in conformity to the manners and idolatries of the Heathen world,) " according + to" (or after the example of) " the prince of the power of the air," even the prince " of the fpirit t" (or disposition and temper)

* Ephef. ii. 2.

† See Whitby on Ephef. ii. 2. with whom compare Fabricius on Sextus Empiricus, note F. p. 571, and Dr. Harwood's New Introduction, p. 303.

េរ

* The Jews had adopted the notion of the Heathens, that the air was inhabited by evil fpirits. See Whitby on Ephef. ii. 2. And to this notion the apoftle feems to refer, when he fpeaks of the prince of the power of the air, or the prince of the aerial power; ceferibing him in this manner, becaufe it was his ufual appellation, and becaufe he really was the ringleader and chief of those wicked fpirits, who were commonly confidered as inhabitants of the air.

+ Kata.

‡ Instead of, the spirit, the original (του ππυματος) ought to be rendered, of the spirit; which Dr. Doddridge well explains by disposition and temper. And that the word, spirit, does often bear this fense, is evident from Pf. II. 10. Luke ix. 55. Rem. viii. 15. 2 Tim. i. 7. and other places. It must bear this fense here; for if by the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience, you understand the devil, who is the prince of that spirit, after whole example the Ephesians had walked ?

Digitized by

.1000le

104

per) " that now worketh in the children of difobedience," or in those who have not been perluaded to embrace the Gospel. The apostle is not here excusing idolatry, from the confideration of mens being urged to commit it by a supernatural power, but aggravating its guilt and softlishness, from the confideration of its conformity to the most odious character, to the example of " the prince of the power of the air," even " the prince," captain and leader of " that temper *" or spirit of disaffection to God, which still actuates and governs the unconverted Heathens.

III. We proceed to coulider the view which the Scripture gives us of the fouls of departed men.

Many eminent writers maintain, that men fink at death into a ftate of total infenfibility till the general refurrection. But we will not avail ourfelves of this opinion; being perfuaded, that the fouls of men, though formed with a great dependence upon the body, with regard to the exercise of all their faculties, are nevertheless feparable from it, and do (by the appointment of God, on which it must depend) exist in a state of confcious reflection, when actually actually feparated from it. In this state however the foul can have no intercourfe with the prefent world. It is the body alone which links us to the world, and the organs of it are the neceffary and only means both of our receiving any notices and impreffions from outward objects, and of our exercifing any dominion over them. And confequently when this animal fystem, with all its wonderful powers of fenfation and activity, is diffolved by death, the foul can have no communication with the material creation. To renew this communication, it must again be united to an organized body. This feems to me most agreeable to reafon *, and is unquefitonably the fenfe of divine revelation. Can lefs than this be implied in those paffages of Scripture, which represent death, and the flate to which it reduces us, by fleep +, in which the organs of the body are bound up; and even by a negation of (corporeal) life and action ‡? The facred writers conftantly affirm, that the dead " know not any thing "," which concerns the prefent world; that they are strangers to the affairs of their nearest relatives $, " (Abraham being ignorant " of

* The fame manner of speaking is used, Micah i. 13. where Lachish is called in the Septuagint, aganges apageness, the prince or ringleader of fin; for this city set Judah an example of idolatry. And in Maccab. ix. 61. mention is made two aganyous the xaxias, of the leaders of that mischief, or the chief in it. The fame manner of speaking was familiar with the Latins. Vestri pulcherrimi facti ille furiosus me principem dicit fuisse. Cicer. ep. Princeps atque architectus sceleris. Id. Princeps sceleris atque concitator belli. Hirt. ap. Caef. B. G. 8. 38.

* See above, ch. ii. fect. 1. p. 64.

+ Deut. xxxi. 16. Job iii. 13. Pf. 1xxvi. 5. Dan. xii. 2.

‡ Job iii. 11, 16. Pf. xxx. 9. Pf. lxxxviii. 10, 12. Ecclef. ix. 5, 6.

|| Ecclef. ix. 6.

§ His fons come to honour, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them, Job xiv. 21.

Digitized by Google

106

" of his own defcendants, and Ifrael acknowledging " them not "," neither acquainted with their fufferings, nor capable of affording any relief:) and in a word, that there is " no work, nor device, nor " knowledge, nor wifdom in the grave +." In this fate, the most eminent faints remain till the general refurrection: for David is not yet " ascended into " the heavens t." Much lefs are the fouls of wicked men advanced to dignity and power. St. Peter calls those who were formerly difobedient in the days of Noah, fpirits in prifon ||; and our Saviour expressly teaches, that the fouls of the dead are in a state, where they can have, of themselves, no possible intercourfe § with the living; and that they are never released from it by God; no not for so important a purpose, as that of perfuading their vicious relatives to reclaim their lives; and confequently not for any lower end.

Notwithstanding these feveral passages of Scripture, and the general idea which it gives us of death, as a punishment for fin, from which we are delivered by а

* Isaiah 1xiii. 16.

+ Ecclef. vi. 10.

‡ Acts ii. 4.

n in

v di

l, 21

53

3 22

ار مستا

تق أ.

212

یار . خست

21

i.

. سالفات

- -

. مى

يور ملك

; : ;

ז ז: זיי ייי

|| 1 Pet. iii. 19.

§ "Between us and you there is a great gulf fixed : fo that " they which would pass from hence to you, cannot; neither " can they pass to us, that would come from thence." Luke xvi. 26, 31.

a proper refurrection *; are well calculated to fubvert the foundation of Pagan fuperstition and idolatry; yet, from too strong a relish of both, the Fathers of the Christian church (as they are stilled by their true fons, who inherit their principles and difpositions) adopted the wild fictions of the Heathen priess and philosophers concerning the state of the dead +; and like them maintained, that the sould of the

* The word anarraris is divirga oraris, refloration. Suidas in voc. Death deftroys our peculiar and diftinguishing nature, as beings compounded of matter and fpirit; yet it does not deftroy the fubftance either of the material or fpiritual part of our composition. The refurrection of the dead confists in their refloration to that kind of life which they formerly enjoyed, and which they loss by death, or in a return to their former state. In the age of the Gospel, all who believed a refurrection, or any future state of retribution, believed the permanency of the human foul after death'; and all who rejected the latter, denied the former. This was the case particularly with respect to the Pharifees and Sadducees amongs the Jews. See Acts axiii. 8, and the history of Josephus. So that our Saviour by afferting the refurrection, would be understood rather to affert, than deny, an intermediate state.

+ Even in the age of the apoftles, fome profeffing Christians denied the refurrection of the dead, I Cor. xv. 12. or faid, it was paffed already, 2 Tim. ii. 18. Having been taught by the Heathen philosophers, to look upon the body as the prison of the foul, and upon death as the means of its liberty and enlargement; they pronounced the refurrection of the dead to be equally undefirable and impossible, and interpreted what Christ and his apostles declared concerning it, of a renovation to a life of holines from a state of sin, described as a state of death. See Whitby on I Cor. xv. 35, and compare Peters on Job, the deceased have fome fense and knowledge of what is doing here*; that they are clothed with fubtle bodies, in which they frequently appear to mankind +; and that perfons of eminent virtue become after death a kind of inferior deities, whose images and fepulchres ought to be honoured and adored.

In order to justify the worship of deified or beatified fouls, they forged innumerable miracles, pretending them to be wrought by apparitions of the faints in dreams, by their intercession, by the touch of their fepulchres, their bones or other reliques. Sir Isaac Newton

Job, p. 403. And because fome of the antient philosophers had taught, that the fouls of illustrious personages ascended, immediately after death, into the celessial regions; many Christians maintained, that the martyrs (and they only) enjoyed the fame privilege.

* Plato, cp. 2. fays, נסדו דוב מוסטחסוב דטוב דנטינושטו דשי ביטמלב.

† The Jews alfo had imbibed this Pagan principle: for the difciples were terrified at the first appearance of Christ after his refurrection, and "fupposed that they had feen a fpirit," Luke xxiv. 37. It is observable, that our Saviour, in his reply, neither countenances nor controverts the opinion, that ghosts can render themfelves visible to human fight, and that in their pristine form; but contents himself with arguing on their own principles, in order to convince them of the truth of his refurrection; q. d. "If you will feel and handle my body, you will "foon perceive from the folidity of it, that I am not a mere "ghost, which you conceive of as prefenting itself to the eye, "and yet eluding the grasp of the hand; but a real man, rai-"fed from the dead in the very fame body, compounded of "flesch and bones, in which I fuffered death."

Newton * has fhewn this concerning the Fathers in the eaft; and the fame is equally true concerning thofe in the weft. To guard all honeft minds againft fo dangerous an imposture, it pleased God to fortel it, and to brand the authors and supporters of it with the character they fo well deferve, that of " a-" postates from genuine Christianity," while they retained the outward profession of it, and " profligate " venders of lies. Now the Spirit speaketh express-" ly, that in the latter times fome shall depart t from " the faith, giving heed to feducing spirits, and doc-" trines concerning demons t," (the fouls of men delified after death,) " through the hypocrify (or, " feigning)

* Observations on Daniel, ch. xiv.

‡ This apoflacy or revolt from the Christian faith, refers to the corruption of it by the introduction of an idolatrous worthip; as is shewn by the eminently learned Mr. Joseph Mede, Works, p. 625. ed. 4.

t διδασκαλιαις δαιμονιων, doStrines concerning demons. Compare Heb. vi. 2. Acts xiii. 12. Jerem. x. 8. in the lxx. and Mede, p. 626. St. Paul here fpecifies the idolatrous worfhip which would prevail amongst Christians, which is that of demons, deified human spirits. See Rev. ix. 20. and below, ch. iii. fect. 2. By demons, it is impossible here to understand devils, (in the common acceptation of that word;) because the Christian church, notwithstanding its dreadful degeneracy in many other instances, never defiled itself with the worship of devils. In Epiphanius (adver. Hær. lxxviii. p. 1055. tom. I. ed. Petav.) there is a clause added to the forecited paffage from St. Paul, which at least ferves to explain it, and which feems to have been a part of the original text, " for they shall " be worshippers of the dead, as in Israel also they were wor-" shipped,"

" feigning) of lyars *," (who will fupport their own erroneous doctrine concerning the divinity and worfhip of dead men, by falfe miracles and other legendary tales, and whom therefore Chriftians ought to deteft as perfons) " having their conficience feared " with a hot iron +." Thus the facred Scriptures both give us fuch a reprefentation of the flate of the dead as is inconfiftent with their poffeffing a miraculous power, and refolve the whole hiftory of their intercourfe with mankind into the falfhood of its compilers; notwithftanding, under various pretences, (fuch as " forbidding to marry," and " com-" manding to abftain from meat t,") they have affumed a claim to extraordinary fanctity.

SECT. II.

The Scripture reprefentation of the nature and claims of the Heathen gods, confidered.

THE gods of the Heathens taken notice of in Scripture, are of two different kinds; the world,

" fhipped," that is, when the Ifraelites fell into the Heathen idolatry. See Mills and Beza in loc. and Mann's critical notes on fome paffages of Scripture, p. 92.

Digitized by Google

- * Ev umoxquoes ประบองกององ.
- + 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2.
- ‡ 1 Tim. iv. 3.

ł

world, together with all its conftituent parts and principles; and demons.

1. The Heathens deified the world, together with all its conftituent parts and powers. Conceiving the world to be pervaded and animated * by a vital and intelligent fubftance, they regarded it as a divinity +, which contained, framed and governed all things. The world poffeffing animal life and intelligence, they concluded the fame concerning the feveral portions of it, efpecially its most illustrious parts and active principles, the elements, the heavens and all their host, the winds also, and whatever other beings partook Principio cælum, ac terras, campoíque liquentés, Lucentemque globum lunæ, Titaniaque aftra Spiritus intus alit, totamque infuía per artus Mens agitat molem, et magno fe corpore mifcet.

Virgil. Æn. 1. 6. 1. 724.

Vide etiam Virg. Georg. 1. 4. v. 221. & Plutarch. de Placitis Philofoph. 1. 2. c. 3. p. 886.

<sup>4</sup> Nec magis approbabit nunc lucere, quam, quoniam Stoicus eft, hunc mundum effe fapientem, habere mentem, quæ & fe & ipium fabricata fit, & omnia moderetur, moveat, regat, Cicero's Acad. Q. l. 2. c. 37. Nihil mundo perfectius,—fapiens eft, & propterea deus, Id. de Nat. Deor. l. 2. c. 14. Omnium rerum parens eft mundus; c. 34. The Platonifts indeed fometimes fpoke of the world as only a fecondary and begotten god, (as we learn from Origen. contr. Cell. l. 5. p. 235. and Plato's Tim. p. 1049. E. F. 1090. A.) but the doctrine of the Stoics, which reprefented the world as the chief god, (Diogen. Laert. l. 7. fegm. 137, 146. Plutarch de Placit. Philofoph. l. 1. c. 7. and Senec. ep. 94.) was more conformable to common creed of the Pagans.

I I 2

partook of a fimilar fubstance; and confidered them all as fo many distinct deities. The fentient nature and divinity of the fun, moon and ftars more efpecially, was strenuously afferted by the philosophers *, as well as believed by the common people; and was indeed the very foundation of the Pagan idolatry. This point was allowed by all, except atheifts +, or those who were reputed such. Anaxagoras, though he maintained the existence of an infinite mind, and its efficiency in the formation of the universe, was neverthelefs accufed of atheifm and impiety, for teaching that the heavenly bodies were inanimate and unintelligent beings, and the fun itself a mass of inflamed matter. Thus it came to pass, that the Pagan nations loft fight of the argument, from the admirable contrivance of the natural world, in favour of the existence of the true God, the original cause of all things. Balbus, the Stoic, in Cicero's fecond book concerning the nature of the gods, difcourfes admirably on the order and harmony of the universe, and the use and beauty of the parts that compose it: but what is the inference he draws from these premifes? " that the world was a god, and the " habitation H * Particularly by Pythagoras and his followers, (as we learn from Diogen. Laert. 1. 8. p. 509.) and by the Stoics. Thus Balbus expresses himself, (in Cicer. de Nat. Deor. 1. 2. 15.) Atque hac mundi divinitate perspecta, tribuenda est fideribus eadem divinitas. See above, note p. 112; and below, note p. 114.

† Stob. Ecl. Phys. c. 25. Plotin. Enn. 4. l. 3. c. 7. and Plutarch. adv. Colotem. p. 1123. A.

Digitized by Google

نوتومید مورد موتومید مورد

" habitation of the gods *," and that it was governed by " the providence of the gods †." These were the first deities of all the idolatrous nations; and were esteemed eternal, sovereign and supreme t. They * Effe mundum deum, & deorum domum.

+ Deorum providentia.

114

‡ Aristotle mentions it as a doctrine delivered down from their very earliest ancestors, and he himself applauds it as a divine faying, that these first substances are gods, Stove unas tas newras ovoias, Metaphyl. 1. 14. c. 8. in fin. Plato condemns the doctrine of Anaxagoras, becaufe it was inconfistent with the divinity of the fun and moon, which have neorxumous shanow TE zas BagGagess martur, " the adorations of all the Greeks and Barbarians." He makes Socrates disclaim this doctrine of Anaxagoras as abfurd, and puts the following words into his mouth, "What! do not I believe as other men do, that the fun and " moon are gods ?" oude ndior, oude redning aga rouila sival Seous, arπες os αλλos ανθεωποι; Plat. Apol. Socrat. p. 362. F. G. ed. Ficini. And he directs a more excellent worthip to be paid to the heaven, than to the other gods, because all men confessed it to be the caufe of all good things, Epin. p. 1006. A. Plutarch censures the Epicureans for afferting, that the sun and moon are void of intelligence, whom all men worshipped, Adv. Colotem. p. 1123. Sanchoniathon (apud Eufeb. Præp. Ev. l. 1. c. ()) reprefents the most ancient nations, particularly the Phenicians and Egyptians as acknowledging only the natural gods, the fun, moon, planets and elements. And Plato declares it as his opinion, that the first Grecians likewise held these only to be gods, as many of the Barbarians in his time did. In Cratyl. p. 273. F. See alfo Herodot. l. 1. c. 131, 138. l. 3. c. 16. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. p. 10, 11. ed. Rhodomani. Strab. Geogr. l. 15. p. 732. Polyb. Hift. l. 7. p. 699, 700. ed. Gronov. Euseb. Præp. Ev. l. 2. e. 2. p. 39. Even Philo (lib. de Somniis,) and Origen (in his books meel ackair,) maintain, that " the flars are fo many fouls incorruptible and immortal."

They are diffinguished by the title of natural gods *.

1

ì

2. The Heathens likewife believed, that there were certain fpirits who held a middle rank + between the gods and men on earth, and carried on all intercourfe between them; conveying the addreffes of men to the gods, and the divine benefits to men  $\ddagger$ . These fpirits were called demons  $\parallel$ , distributors or dispension of good and evil to mankind. Their name is expressive of their office, and of that power and authority which they derived from the celeftial gods \$. H 2

* Overses Stor. Philo Byblius apud Eufeb. Præp. Ev. 1. 1. c. 9. p. 33. ed. Paris.

† Πῶν τὸ δαιμόνιον μιταξύ ἐςι Ͽιοῦ τι καὶ Ͽνητοῦ. Plato in Sympos. p. 202. tom. 3. ed. Serrani. Plutarch (de defect. Orac.) fays, "Those feem to me to have folved very many and great " difficulties or doubts, who place the demons," ἐν μίσω Ͽιῶν κỳ ἀνθεώπων.

‡ Plutarch de defect. Orac. p. 415, 416, 417, 421. E. Platon. Sympof. p. 202, 203. tom. 3. ed. Serrani. Apuleius de deo Socrat. p. 674, 677. ed. Delph. Jamblichus de myster. & August. de civit. Dei, 1. 8. c. 18. l. 9, c. 9. 21.

- || They were called demons, παφὰ τὸ δαῆναι τὰ πάντα, ἡ μιφίζειν τὰ ἀγαθὰ κỳ κακὰ τοῖς ἀνθεώποις, Proclus in Hefiod. See alfo the fcholiaft on Homer, Il. 1. v. 222. Others derive δαίμων from δαίμων, fciens, Plato Cratylus, p. 397. and Lactantius, II. 14. Demons were thought to be intrufted with the infpection and government of mankind.

§ Plutarch (de defect. Orac.) informs us, that each demon was called by the name of that celeftial god, παε' & δυτάμεως κζ τιμῶς ἐίληχεν. Apuleius (De deo Socratis, p. 675, ed. Delph.) fays, Cuncta

116

It was the opinion of many, that the celeftial divinities did not themfelves interpole in human affairs, but committed the entire administration of the government of this lower world to these subaltern deities*. Hence they became the grand objects of the religious hopes and fears of the Pagans, of immediate dependence and divine worfhip. " If idols are no-" thing," fays Celfus +, " what harm can there be " to join in the public feftivals? If they are demons, " then it is certain that they are gods, in whom we " are to confide, and to whom we should offer facri-" fices and prayers to render them propitious." In the most learned nations, they did not fo properly fhare, as ingro/s the public devotion. To these alone facrifices were offered, while the celeftial gods were worfhipped only with a pure mind, or with hymns and praifes ||.

It has been often faid, that the demons of the Heathens

Cuncla cælestium voluntate, numine, & authoritate, fed dæmonum obsequio, & opera, & ministerio fieri arbitrandum eft. Apuleius here refines the vulgar system, when he represents demons merely as a ministerial order of beings.

* Neque enim pro majestate deum cælessium fuerit, hæc curare. Apuleius de deo Socratis, p. 677. ed. Delph. Plato (in Sympol. p. 202. tom. 3 ed. Serm.) speaks to the same effect, " No god has any immediate intercourse with man: all com-" merce betwen the gods and men is carried on by the media-" tion of demons." Does not Plato's Suis àrseáns à pissures, explain Dan. ii. 11?

Digitized by Google

+ Apud Origen. c. Celf. 1. 8. p. 393.

|| Mede's works, p. 636.

thens were spirits of an higher origin than the human race. Those who hold this opinion, lay the chief ftrefs on the following arguments; the force of which we shall take the liberty to examine. Ift, " The fu-" preme deity of the Pagans is called the greate/t de-" mon." Supposing this to be the cafe, it is perhaps one proof, amongst many others, that their fupreme deity fustained a human character, and had once been a mortal man. Notwithstanding the magnificent titles by which the heathens defcribe their fupreme deity; yet they do at the fame time inform us, that he had a father and a mother, a grandfather and a grandmother, and was of the fame kindred with the other gods of whom he was chief. And though he was superior to any of them fingly, he was no match for two or three of them in conjunction; as appears from the dread he was in of being feized and bound by Neptune, Juno and Minerva; from whole violence he was not faved without the affistance of Briareus with his hundred arms. This is related by Homer * of that very Jupiter, whom he ftyles " the father and fovereign of gods and men, ** who thunders on high, and thakes all heaven with " his nod." Such likewife is the reprefentation made of Jupiter by the other Heathen writers + : they afcribe to

H 3

* Il. 1. v. 398. See Lucian. Deor. dialog. inter oper. v. 1. p. 228. ed. Varior.

+ Hefiod, in particular, speaks of Jupiter in the very highest terms, in his Theogony, v. 47, 457, 481, 506, 548 : and yet he tells us, that he was the youngest fon of F a and Saturn, and dethroned his father, v. 453, 490.

to him the prerogatives, titles and epithets of their fupreme natural divinity, and at the fame time cloath him with the weakneffes, vices *, and all the properties of a human being. It is plain therefore that he fustained two characters, that of a natural, and that of a hero god. It feems difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile the different representations made of him, on any other fuppofition. It is allowed by all, that a mixture of physiology and herology runs through the Pagan fystem of divinity +. It is likewise evident, that as amongst the natural, fo also amongst the hero gods, there was a diffinction of rank and dignity, and one was confidered as prince of the reft. It farther appears, that deified human fpirits were (according to the Pagan fystem of theology) affociated with and reprefented the natural gods, and that both were called * Chærea (in Terence, Eunuch. Act. iii. fc. 5.) hardens himfelf into the commission of a rape, by the example of Jupiter, the god, who shakes with his thunder tac losty battlements of heaven; qui templa cœli summa sonitu concutit.

+ That the first substances are gods, and that the deity contains universal nature, Aristotle tells us, was delivered in the form of a fable, is uses eximal, Metaphys. 1. 14. c. 8. in fin. These fables were the means of corrupting their theology, and occasioned the Heathens to transfer their worship to new objects. Specimens of the manner, in which they accommodated the fabulous traditions concerning their hero gods to the deified objects of nature, may be seen, in Cicero de Nat. deor. 1. 2. c 24, 25.

118

called by the fame names *. The fun, or æther, or air, or whatever other part of nature was efteemed the fupreme deity of the Pagans, was called in Egypt, Ofiris; in Chaldea and Phenicia, Bel or Baal; and in many other countries, Jupiter. Now it is univerfally known, that Jupiter, Bel and Ofiris had once been mortal men, who were fuppofed to be advanced after death to a deified state. For the fame reasons, therefore, for which the chief Heathen numen was called Ofiris, or Bel, or Jupiter, he might be called a demon; supposing the word to denote a deified human spirit. It was under this last character that he was principally regarded by the common people. 2dly, It is further urged, " that demons are describ-" ed as beings placed between the gods and men." This description respects, not their nature, but their office +, (which was that of mediators and agents be-H 4 tween * Diodorus Siculus (1. 1. p. 12. ed. Rhodomani,) fays, that fome of the earthly gods had the fame names with the celeftial, ipunipus; imagzerin rois iganious. See Plutarch cited above, p. 175. note l. From Philo Biblius (apud Eufeb. Præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 9. p. 33. ed. Paris.) we learn, that the ancient nations "gave the names of their kings to the elements of the world," rois zoopuzois souzérious, which were their natural deities, whom alone they acknowledged to be flrictly and properly gods. Lord Herbert obferves, (De Relig. Gentil. c. 11.) Initio heroas in aftris plerumque, aftra in heroibus colentes, adeo ut cognomines ita effent, neque fatis judicari poffet, num aniles de iis contextæ fabulæ ad aftra myftice, an ad homines mythice pertinerent.

Digitized by Google

† See above, p. 115.

120

tween men on earth, and the celestial gods;) and confequently agrees with fuch human fpirits (and it is not to be denied, that there were fome fuch) as were thought to be advanced to the office of demons. It may be proper to take notice farther, that when Jamblichus*, the Pythagorean philosopher, makes it the reward of good men at death, to be converted into angels and angelical fouls +; he has the fame mean-The learned ing, as if he had called them demons. allow, that Jamblichus, Hierocles, Simplicius and others, use the word demons and angels indifcriminately. Hierocles fays expressly 1, that the middle kind of beings were called indifferently angels, or demons, or heroes. Now it is univerfally admitted, that the latter were human fpirits : and confequently the former were fo likewife. Philo fays ||, " Souls, demons and " angels are only different names, but imply one and " the fame fubstance." And in another place § he affirms, " that Mofes called those angels, whom the " other philosophers styled demons." adly, It is pleaded, " that demons are expressly diftinguished " from heroes, who were the departed fouls of men." Demons

* Apud Stob. Eclog. Physic. 1. 1. p. 144.

+ Eis ἀ[γέλυς ϳ κ ἀ[γελικὰς ψυχὰς.

‡ In Car. Pythag.

|| De Gigantibus, p. 286.

§ De Somn. p. 586. ες άλλοι φιλόσοφοι δαίμονας, ά[γέλυς Μωσης έμωθεν όνομαζειν.

Demons were advanced to a rank and flation * fuperior to, that of heroes; and this difference occafioned the diffinction. Plutarch + teaches, " that, accord-" ing to a divine nature and juffice, the fouls of vir-" tuous men are advanced to the rank of demons; " and that from demons, if they are properly purifi-" ed, they are exalted into gods, not by any politi-" cal inflitution, but according to right reafon." The fame author fays ‡, " That Ifis and Ofiris were, for " their virtue, changed from good demons into gods, " as were Hercules and Bacchus afterwards, receiv-" ing the united honours of both gods and de-" mons ||."

I do not affirm, that the Heathens had no demons of

* On this difference of rank and station, see Hierocles in secundum Aur. Carm. p. 41.

+ Plutarch. Vit. Romul. p. 36. A. ed. Paris. and in his book de defect. orac. he fpeaks of human fouls as commencing first heroes, then demons, and afterward advanced to a more sublime degree.

, ‡ De If. & Ofir. p. 361.

|| Kai 9 ເພັν x) duiu ότων. These sentiments of Plutarch are confirmed by other writers. Diodorus Siculus (p. 3. ed. Rhodomani.) after speaking of Hercules, adds, των 3 α'λων α α αθων αναθαυ ei μεν εφωικών, ei di i σοθέων τιμών έτυχον. It also appears from the case of the Greek Hercules, as related by Pausanias, (Corinthiac. 1. 2. c. 10. p. 133. ed. Kuhnii.) that herces role by degrees to the rank of gods, and came to be worshipped as such. (For the worship paid to the gods, was different from that paid to the herces.)

122

of a different kind from those who were of human extract *. The foregoing reflections were merely defigned to fhew, that the higher order of demons is not fo frequently fpoken of, as is generally fuppofed; and that the common hypothefis is built upon weak I shall now affign those reasons which ingrounds. duce me to think, that by demons (fuch, I mean, as were " the more immediate objects of the established worfhip" amongst the ancient nations, particularly the Egyptians, Greeks and Romans,) we are to underfland beings of an earthly origin, or fuch departed human fouls as were believed to become demons. Hefiod +, and many other poets t, who have recorded the ancient biftory or traditions, on which the public faith and worship were founded, affert, that the men of the golden age, who were fuppofed to be very good, became demons after death, and dispensers of good things to mankind. This account of demons is fully confirmed by the other writings of the ancient Many passages have been produced from Heathens. those writings by feveral learned moderns ||, in which demons must have the fame meaning as in Hefiod, And

* Some of the latest philosophers, in particular, (fuch as Apuleius, de deo Socrat, p. 690.) fancied that there was a higher kind of demons, who had never inhabited human bodies. Ammonius in Plutarch entertained the fame fentiment. De defect. orac. p. 431. tom. 2. ed. Paris. 1624.

+ Hefiod. Oper. & dier. l. 1. 120.

1 Plato's Cratylus, p. 398. tom. 1. ed. Serrani.

|| Mr. Jof. Mede, and Dr. Sykes.

And there are many more, which I do not remember to have met with in any former writers on this fubject. Some of these passages have been already cited; and a much greater number we shall have occasion to cite in the fequel. I will here only take notice of two from Celfus, becaufe they ferve to fhew, how long the word preferved its original import, and was used to defcribe a deified man. Thus Celfus * infults Chriftians under their fufferings : "Your demon, or " as you fay, the Son of God, gives you no help." In another place +, after speaking of the followers of Marcion, he adds, " Others form to themfelves ano-" ther master and demon." Perhaps it would be as ufelefs, as it would be endlefs, to collect all the paffages from the writings of the Heathens, in which mention is made of demons, in the fense here afferted. For still fome would allege, that the word occurred frequently in a different meaning. Our main defign (which is, to explain and juffify the Scripture reprefentation of the Heathen deities,) will be answered : if it can be shewn, that the more immediate objects of divine worship in the most polished Heathen nations were deified mortals. This, at the fame time. may ferve to fhew, in what fenfe it is most natural to understand the word, demons, when it is used to defcribe those gods.

That the more immediate objects of popular adoration amongst the Heathens were deified human beings,

- * Apud Origen. c. Celf. l. 8. § 39. p. 803.
- † P. 272.

124

ings, is a fact attefted by all antiquity, whether Pagan, Jewish or Christian. Let the Heathens themselves fpeak, and let us credit the united testimony of their historians, their poets, and their philosophers, to a fact which they could not but admit, though it redounded fo much to their difhonour. We shall begin with the doctrine of the bistorians; because it is clear and explicit, and may ferve to guide us through the labyrinths of the Pagan theology. Herodotus *, when speaking of the Persians, fays, " They have " neither flatues, nor temples, nor altars.---What I " take to be the reason, is, that they don't believe, " like the Greeks, that the gods are of the race of " men +." Now, inafmuch as the Greeks derived their religion from the Phenicians and Egyptians, and fpread it amongst the Romans, there can be no doubt, but that the gods of all these people were of human race. Philo Byblius ‡, the translator of Sanchoniathon's hiftory of the gods, expressly affures us, " That " the Phenicians and Egyptians, from whom other " people derived this cuftom, reckoned those amongst " the greatest gods, who had been benefactors to the " human race: and that to them they erected pillars " and statues, and dedicated facred festivals." Diodorus Siculus # treats largely concerning the Gentile theology;

* Lib. 1. c. 131.

+ Oun ανθεωποφυίας ένόμισαν τές θεώς, κατάπες οι Έλληνες, έναι.

Digitized by Google

‡ Apud. Eufeb. Præp. Ev. l. 1. c. 9. p. 32.

|| Lib. 1. & 5.

theology; and he speaks of it as the opinion of antiquity, "that there were two classes of gods; the one "eternal and immortal," (the natural gods spoken of above;) "the other such as were born upon the "earth, and arrived at the titles and honcurs of di-"vinity, on account of the blessings they bestowed "upon mankind *." He confiders Saturn, Jupiter, Apollo and the rest, as the primary gods of Paganism; and yet speaks of them as illustrious men.

The poets deliver the fame fentiments concerning the gods, as the historians do. In their theogony + or generation of the gods, (which was the fame thing with their cofinogony or generation of the world,) and in their fabulous theology, we have an account both of their natural and hero gods; though by mixing together their herology and phyfiology, they have introduced much confusion into their fystem of divinity. With regard to the principal objects of popular worship, they have given us an account of their birth and parentage, of their marriage and offspring, and have entered into a detail of their actions t. Whatever fublime titles the poets beftow upon them, they hold them out to our view chiefly under a human character. Nor is there any just reason to affirm, that the poets invented what they fay concerning their gods. For their works are either faithful records of ancient * Lib. 1. p. 12. ed. Rhodomani.

+ See Hefiod's Theogony, and Homer's Il. 14. v. 201.

1 See what was faid above concerning Jupiter, p. 117.

ancient traditions, or accurate reprefentations of life and manners. Epic and dramatic writings do not allow any deviation from truth and justness of character.

It is when reading the philosophers, that it becomes us most to be upon our guard, if we would not be led into miftakes concerning the Pagan deities. When they began to reason upon the nature of the gods, innumerable objections arole in their minds against the yulgar fystem of theology; which some of them derided, and others endeavoured to refine and improve. Shocked at the abfurdity of the worfhip paid to dead perfons, they might be willing to perfuade themfelves and others, that their demons were spiritual substances of a more noble origin than the human race. They undertook to determine, with what fort of beings all the different regions of the universe were peopled : and fome of them filled the æther with fuch demons as had never been men. But we have no concern here with the (peculations of the philosophers, who on this, as on other points, contradicted one another, and themfelves likewife. It is fufficient to our prefent purpose to observe, that they were not able to deny, that the public worfhip was directed to men who had been raifed to the rank of gods and demons. Socrates *, indeed, judged it difficult to declare the origin of demons; which at first fight feems fcarce confistent with a persuasion, that they were of human extract. Nevertheless, he thought they were natives

* Plato's Timzus, p. 481. ed. Basil.

natives of this lower world, proceeding from the commerce of celeftial with mortal beings. Perhaps this strange commerce was what created the difficulty in the breaft of Socrates : for he rejected many of the common fables concerning the gods. Nor does it certainly appear, that even the celeftial beings concerned in these amours, were not originally mortals, though afterwards advanced to a deified state. Plato commends Hefiod and the other poets, who affirmed, that whenever any good man dies, he becomes a demon *. He elfewhere fpeaks to the fame purpofe +. The latter Platonists, though they endeavoured to foften the absurdity of the established fystem of theology, could not but admit a class of gods and demons, that had been human fouls. Varro, the most learned of all the Romans, afferted, as St. Augustin informs us t, that one would be at a loss to find, in the writings of the ancients, gods who had not been men. Cicero || contends, " that the whole " heaven

* Finiras daiuwr. Plat. Cratyl. p. 398. tom. 1. ed. Serrani. See alfo Maxim. Tyr. Diff. 27. p. 283. ed. Davis.

+ "All those who die valiantly in war are of Hessid's golden "generation, and become demons; and we ought for ever to "worship and adore their sepulchres, as the sepulchres of de-"mons." He affirms the same concerning all who were judged excellently good in life, in whatever manner they die. Plato de Republ. 1. 5. p. 468. tom. 2. ed. Serrani.

‡ De civit. Dei, 1. 8.

Z

ŗ,

2

2

ż

2

R

ï

ĩ.

3

....

k

Ć

-

2

5

|| Quid ? totum prope cælum, ne plures persequar, nonne humano genere completum est ?--Ipfi illi, majorum gentium dii

" heaven was almost entirely filled with the human " race, that even the greater deities * were originally " natives of this lower world, that their fepulchres " were shewn in Greece, and the traditions concern-" ing them preferved in the mysteries." In like manner Pliny +, Labeo ‡, Servius || and others, speak openly of the origin of the gods. And Plutarch himfelf vindicates the deification of human fouls, by the principles of reason and philosophy ¶. Not only did Atheists and Epicureans affert, that the Heathen gods had been men; this was a point allowed by the zealous supporters of the established religion, even in an age dii qui habentur, hinc a nobis profecti in cælum reperientur. Quære, quorum demonstrantur sepulchra in Grecia: reminifcere, quoniam es initiatus, quæ traduntur mysteriis: tum denique, quam hoc latè pateat, intelliges. Tusc. Quæst. 1. 1. c. 12, 13. It is affirmed in Cicero's dialogue de Nat. deor. l. 1. that every age honoured the inventors of the use of food, ut deos omnium clarissimos. See also l. 1. c. 42. l. 3. c. 15, 23. and compare Lactant. l. 1. c. 15. p. 85. l. 2. c. 2. p. 146. Euseb. Dem. Ev. l. 8. p. 364.

* The greater deities were

Juno, Vesta, Minerva, Ceres, Diana, Venus, Mars, Mercurius, Jovis, Neptunus, Vulcanus, Apollo.

+ Plin. Nat. Hift. l. 2. c. 7.

2 Servius (upon the 3d Æneid) fays, Labeo in libris qui appellantur, De diis quibus origo animalis eft, ait effe quædam facra, quibus animæ humanæ vertuntur in deos.

|| Serv. ad Æn. 8. 1. 319.

¶ See the paffage from Plutarch cited above, p. 182.

age when the improvements in fcience exposed it to contempt.

These testimonies of the Heathens are fully confirmed by facts, which cannot be disputed: particularly by the very nature of the worship paid to the Heathen deities. If no argument can be drawn from the facrifices \* which were offered them; yet their images, columns, fhrines, reliques, altars (or graveftones) and temples (which were their fepulchres), are fufficient proofs, that the objects of public worship were fuch dead men and women as superstition deified  $\dagger$ . I

Deified human ghofts might more naturally be supposed to be nourished by the fumes of incense, and the steams of flaughtered beafts ascending from their altars, than the fun, moon and stars. See Origen. c. Celf. 1. 7. c. 334, 335. Concerning the idea of facrifices, as the nourifhment of the gods, confult Aristoph. Aves. v. 183, 1515. Euseb. Præp. Ev. 1. v. p. 181. Lucian. Prometh. tom. 1. p. 183. ed. Græv. De Sacrificiis, ib. p. 366. Porphyr. de Abstin. 1. 2. c. 42. p. 86. ed. Cantabr. We are told by Eusebius (Præp. Ev. 1. 2. c. 9.) that in the earlieft ages, when the ftars only were adored, they were not honoured by animal facrifices : which feem therefore to have been principally directed to the hero gods. See above, p. 176. Nevertheless, it must be acknowleged, that such Pagans and Christians as believed the Heathen gods to be a different order of demons from human fouls, reprefented those demons as nourifhed by libations and facrifices.

+ See Sir If. Newton's Chronology, p. 159, 160. and effecially Mr. Jof. Mede's works, p. 632, 634. That the flately tombs of the Heathen gods became public temples, is alfo mewn by Eufebius, Præp. Ev. l. 2. c. 6.

Even funeral rites * were performed in their honour. Euhemerus therefore in his facred hiftory, befides recording the pedigree and actions of the Heathen gods, pointed out the very places where they were buried. His hiftory was translated into Latin by Ennius, and is mentioned by Diodorus Siculus without any marks of difapprobation. Those who cenfured +, were not able to confute, the fubftance * Mede's works, p. 628, 630. Lowth on If. viii. 19. Cieero de Nat. Deor. 1. 1. c. 15. Lucan thus addreffes Egypt, —Tu plangens hominem teftaris Ofirin. 1. 8. v. 833.

+ It has been faid by learned men, upon the authority of a paffage in Cicero, (de Nat. deor. l. 1, c. 42.) that the opinion of Euhemerus was generally regarded by the Heathens as atheifm, or at least as great impiety. Were this true, the most that it would prove, is, that the Heathen gods were not regarded as dead men by their worshippers, though they were really fuch. But what fome represent as the general fentiment · of the Heathens, is nothing more than the objection of Cotta, under the character of an Academic, which he could not fuftain, without proposing the difficulties and objections, with which his subject was embarassed. See Cicero de Nat. deor. 1. 3. c. 39. and l. I. c. 5. Cotta fays, Ab Euhemero autem -& mortes, & fepulturæ demonstrantur deorum ; and then a'fks the following question : Utrum igitur hic confirmafie videtur religionem, an penitus totam sustuiise? This objection is not defigned to disprove the fact, that the Heathens worshipped dead perfons; but to expose the abfurdity of that worthip. Cotta admitted the fact, and knew that the worship itself pointed out the objects of it ! Quo quid absurdius, quamhomines jam morte deletos reponere in deos, quorum omnis cultus effet futurus in luctu? Cicero de Nat. deor. l. 1. c. 15. Plutarch alfo cenfures the doctrine of Euhemerus as productive of ftance of his fystem. If the mere absurdity of an opinion would prove that it was never entertained; what a blank would this reasoning make in the history of religion amongst the Pagans?

Digitized by Google

We go on to examine the opinion of the fews concerning the Heathen gods. With refpect to the writers of the Old Teftament; though they knew, that the Pagans believed in fidereal and elementary deities, yet they very properly defcribe their gods as I 2 dead of atheiim, De If. & Our. p. 359, F. p. 360. Nevertheleis, from this treatife it appears, that the Egyptian priefts acknowledged, that Ofiris and the other gods of Egypt had been men. Nay, Plutarch himfelf confesses, (p. 359. E.) that those who hold this opinion, "xours and this isogouption Bondenas, bave the fupport of bistory: to which he opposes speculation, p. 360. This confirms what was observed concerning the philosophers, p. 189. I admit, however, that the doctrine of Euhemerus might even in the opinion of the vulgar Heathens, be very liable to the cenfure of impiety; and certainly was liable to this cenfure, if he maintained, (as possibly he did, or might be thought to maintain) that the Heathen gods were mere men, not advanced to a deified state; or that the Heathens had no other gods but thefe. In this view he might well pass for an atheift. The deification of men prefuppofed the existence of the natural gods, with whom they were affociated, and from whom they derived their power and authority. And therefore if he rejected the natural gods, he would be thought not to believe in any gods at all. With this he feems to be charged by Theophil. Antiochen. ad Autolyc. l. 3. p. 210. ed Oxon. Concerning Euhemerus, fee Eufeb. Præp. Ev. l. 2. c. 2. p. 59, where there is an extract from the 6th book of Diodorus Si. culus, now loft. See also Lactantius, Div. Instit. 1. I. c. 2p. 62. et de ira Dei, c. 2. p. 62. ed. Lugd. Bat. 1660.

•

dead * perfons; becaufe it was to fuch that the public worfhip was more immediately directed. Here it fhould be obferved, that when they defcribe the Heathen gods as dead perfons; they confider them as what they really were, not what they were conceived to be by their worfhippers; as fome have afferted: for their worfhippers regarded them as men advanced to divine power and dominion. In contradiffunction from thefe, the ancient prophets called Jehovah the only living + God. Thofe Jews who translated the Old Teftament into the Greek language, (I mean the authors of that version which is called the Septuagint) ftyle the Heathen gods, demons ‡. And it has been generally

* This is implied in that declaration, which Mofes required each Ifraelite to make, at offering the first fruits of every year, Deut. xxvi. 14. " I have not given ought thereof for (or to) the dead," to any Heathen deity : which fuppoles, that each of those deities was nothing more than a dead person. Such was Is, to whom Spencer and Le Clerc think there is here a peculiar reference. Those who partook of the facrifices offered to the Pagan gods, are faid " to eat the facrifices of the dead," Pf. cvi. 28. compared with Numb. xxv. 1, 2, 3. It was because the Heathen deities were dead men, that Ifaiah reproaches those who had recourse to their pretended oracles, as " feeking for the living to the dead." If. viii. 19.

+ Deut. v. 26. Josh. iii. 10. 1 Sam. xvii. 26. 2 Kings xix. 4. Jerem. x. 10. Dan. vi. 26. and many other places.

t "They factificed unto demons," dasposios, Deut. xxxii.
17. "All the gods of the Heathen are demons," dasposia, Pf. xcv. 6. "They factificed their fons and their daughters unto demons," dasposios, Pf. cvi. 37.

ų.

133

generally supposed, that by demons they meant certain created spirits of a celestial origin, who, though fallen from God and virtue, posses a very extensive power over this lower world. This however is a point that ought not to be taken for granted. The authors of the Septuagint were not unacquainted with the Greek learning. They could not therefore be ignorant, that the Heathens did not acknowledge any created fpirits; or at least, that according to their eftablished fystem of theology, the world and every thing in it, was either eternal or begotten, not created. As little reafon is there to fuppofe them ignorant, in what lense the word, demons, was used by the Heathens, both in their writings, and in their common difcourfe. No word in the Greek language could be more familiar to them, especially as applied to the objects of popular adoration, or fuch human fpirits as were fuppofed to become demons, whether confidered as good or evil. Now, why fhould it be prefumed, that thefe writers use this word in a fense different from all the Greeks, when fpeaking upon the fame fubject? Besides, did not the authors of the Septuagint version know, (what all the world knew) that the Heathen gods had once been men? Could they be ignorant, that in the books which they translated, and which they acknowledged to be infpired, these gods were represented in this their true light? Or, shall it be taken for granted, that in open contradiction to the infpired writers, and in defiance of their own inward convictions, they were capable of affirming, that all the Heathen gods were of a different origin from mankind? Such a degree of

I 3

Ī

đ

of extravagance and wickedness as this implies, ought not to be charged upon any writers, without the strongest proofs. For these reasons, it appears to me most probable, that they used the word to express fuch human spirits as became demons. And I am confirmed in this opinion, by attending to the particular occasions on which they use it *. As to the other Jews who wrote in the Greek language, they were no strangers to this meaning of demons. We have already had occasion to explain the fentiments of Philo+. With respect to Josephus, he fays exprefsly, " Demons are the fpirits of wicked men t." This shews, that in the writings of the Hellenistic Jews, particularly those who lived near the commencement of the Christian æra, the word is to be understood of fuch departed human spirits as became demons.

Is it not natural then to fuppole, that it bears the fame

* It will be fhewn below, that the paffages in the Hebrew text which correspond to those cited above (p. 132, n. 1) from the Septuagint, manifelly refer to the hero gods of the Heathens. I add here, that when the authors of this version fay, If. 1xv. II. that the Jews " prepared a table to a demon," row damposile; it feems to me more natural to understand them, as reproaching the Jews with facrificing to fome Heathen demon, than to any fallen angel. See Lowth in loc. and compare Dr. Sykes': Further Enquiry; p. 35.

+ See above, page 120.

‡ Τὰ γὰς καλύμενα δαιμόνια, ταῦτα δὶ πονηςῶν ἐςιν ἀνθρώπων πνούματα, De Bel. Jud. 1. 7. c. 6. § 3.

134

fame meaning in the New Testament? There the Heathen deities are called demons: " Those things " which the Gentiles facrifice, they facrifice to de-" vils, or demons "." St. Paul, whofe language this is, was a perfon of extensive learning, and well acquainted with the theology of the Gentiles, which represented human spirits as becoming demons after death. He knew, that these demons were the very perfons to whom the Gentiles offered their facrifices. At the fame time he was converfant in those writings of the infpired prophets, which taught, that the Heathen gods were men and women deceased. He himfelf (in imitation of those prophets) diffinguishes Jehovah from them by the title of the living ‡ God. Now, if he knew them to belong to the human fpecies; would he deny that they had been men, and affirm that they were angels? To suppose that he would, is to charge him, not with error, but with wilful falsehood : a charge that cannot be supported, but by putting a fenfe upon his language, which, to fay the least, was not the most usual and common one. Befides, this apoftle was not only himfelf well acquainted with the theology of the Gentiles, but was I4 writing Δαιμοτίως. The apofile adds, "I would not that ye fhould " have fellowship with devils, δαιμοτίων, demons. Ye cannot " drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils, δαιμοτίων,

" demons: ye can not be partakers of the table of the Lord,
" and of the table of devils, δαιμοτίων, demons," I Cor. x. 20, 21.

1 Acts xiv. 15. 2 Cor. vi. 16. 1 Theff. i. 9.

135

writing to Gentiles, who knew that, according to their theology, human fpirits became demons after death; and who would naturally understand him as referring to Jupiter, Venus, and other men and women, whom they had once worfhipped under this very character. Would not St. Paul then use the word, demon, in the fame fenfe in which he knew it would be underftood, by those Gentiles to whom he was writing? If you fay he borrowed it from the Jews who fpoke the Greek language, particularly the authors of the Septuagint; you fuggest a new proof of the point we would establish: for it must be admitted, that he would employ it, as we have feen they did, to describe such human spirits as were called demons. There are passages in St. Paul's writings, and in other places of the New Teftament, where it cannot bear a different meaning *.

In

* When St. Paul preached to the Athenians Jefus Chrift as rifen from the dead; he feemed to fome of his hearers, a fetter forth of strange gods, damonium, demons, (Acts xvii. 18, 22.) which, as our translators themselves were sensible, cannot fignify devils, (in the ordinary acceptation of that word) but must denote deified men; the Athenians imagining that St. Paul was recommending a new deity, who had once been a man. Nor can it be fuppoled, that St. Paul himfelf, in his addrefs to the Athenians, would use the word in a fense different from what they did, when he calls them desordaumoverieus, (v. 22.) " perfons much addicted to the worship of demons," or 'gods of human original; for to fuch gods all the devotion of the Athenians and other Greeks was directed. The worship of cannonized faints amongst idolatrous Christians, is called " the doctrine " concerning demons," I Tim. iv. I. explained above, ch. 3. fect.

136

In the late controverfy upon this fubject, both parties feem to have committed feveral great miftakes. I fhall take notice of a very effential one, relative to our prefent argument. On the one fide, it was afferted, that demon never fignifies an evil being, till after the times of Chrift: whereas the word is indifferent in itfelf, and is ufed in a bad as well as a good fenfe by very ancient writers*. On the other fide, it was affirmed, that fect. 1. p. 109. And the fame corruptors of Christianity are reproached, for not repenting of the works of their hands, that " they should not worship demons." Rev. ix. 20: which must refer to faint worship and image worship: for who can charge Christians with the worship of wicked spirits, as such?

* If the first demons were all good, as Dr. Sykes afferts; ' it is because the first men, (whose fouls they were) the men of the golden age, were all good. For we shall shew, that the Heathens thought, that the departed fpirits of good and bad men became respectively good and bad demons. There is therefore ground to prefume, that as foon as mankind degenerated, their departed fpirits would be reprefented as wicked and mifchievous, that is, as bad demons. The common or conftant use of demon in the earliest ages in a good sense, unless when xaxos, or fome fimilar epithet is joined with it; is owing to its being applied at first to the deified fouls of good men. Plutarch tells us, in his life of Dion, near the beginning, p. 958. ed. Paris. 1624. " that it was the opinion of the " ancients, that evil and mifchievous demons, out of envy and " hatred to good men, oppose whatever they do." In his treatife concerning Isis and Osiris, p. 360. he speaks of demons who had a mixture of virtue and vice in their character, and reprefents Xenocrates and Empedocles as believing there were fuch demons. From those writings of the ancients which are come down to us, we accordingly find, that they used the word

Digitized by Google

that demons in general, and the bad in particular, were fpirits of a celeftial origin, and that it was of the latter, (or of apoftate angels) that the word was to be understood, both in the Septuagint, and in the paffages of St. Paul cited above. We may allow, (what however has not hitherto been established by clear and certain * evidence) that in the places under our word demon in a bad fense, and applied it not only to the principle of evil, but to other malignant fpirits. Pythagoras held demons who fent difeafes to men and cattle; Diogen. Laert. Vit. Pythag. p. 514. ed. Amft. And though fome of the Heathens might regard evils as the inflictions of juffice; and it is possible that xax@ daunar may fignify fometimes (and particularly in Homer, as Dr. Sykes contends) an adver/e demon; neverthelefs, the hurtful demons were generally confidered as violent and cruel in their nature, and were accordingly to be appealed by cruel rites. Befides, they were thought to infligate men to wickedness. Zaleucus in his preface to his laws, apud Stobæum, ferm. 42. fuppofes, that an evil demon might be present with a man, reinor neos adiriar, to influence bim to injustice. Empedocles (according to Plutarch, de If. & Ofir. p. 361, and in lib. reei ru un darei ledan.) spoke of demons who were punished for their crimes. And Ocellus Lucanus, in a paffage to be cited immediately, makes express mention of wicked demons. These instances are fufficient to shew in general, what alone they are here produced to fhew, that the most ancient writers, believed in bad as well as good demons. Accordingly daments frequently occurs in them, as a term of reproach, as well as praife.

* It feems to me difficult to determine with abfolute certainty, whether demon is ufed in a good or in a bad fenfe in the lxx. It might, poffibly, be chofen on account of its ambiguity: for the authors of that vertion were not difpofed to give

1

K

ć

J

....

2

2

2

z

5

2

our prefent confideration, the word is to be taken in a bad fenfe, and is applied to wicked fpirits. Neverthelefs, it cannot be inferred from hence, that thefe wicked fpirits were originally of a higher order than mankind. For as the fouls of many good men were thought to become good demons after death; fo it was a prevailing opinion, that the departed fouls of many give offence to the Pagans, amongst whom they lived; nor were they free themfelves from every tincture of Paganism. Were we certain, in what fenfe it was to be understood in the 1xx, we should be equally certain of the meaning of it in the writings of St. Paul; inafmuch as this apollle and indeed all the writers of the New Testament adopted the style and dic-That in both, demon is to be taken in a bad tion of the lxx. fense, seems to me somewhat probable, for the following reafons. Some of the Heathens themselves inferred from the actions ascibed to their gods, and the rites by which they were appealed, that they were not gods, but evil demons. See Plutarch de If. & Ofir. p. 361, B. p. 362, E. & de defect. Orac. p. 417, C. D. compate Porphyr. de Abst. 1. 2. fect. 36, 37, 42. The Jews who wrote in the Greek language, use demon in a bad fenfe, particularly Josephus cited above and the translator of Tobit, ch. iii. 8. ch. vi. 17. Grotius thought " that " the Hellenists used daimar in an ill fense, as the Hebrews " did Baal; though both originally indifferent in their figni-" fication ;" Note on Math. iv. 23. Laftly, the New Teltament does certainly, on fome occasions, by demons mean evil fpirits, Matth. ix. 34. James ii. 19: and therefore the word may have the fame meaning, when it is applied to the Heathen gods. On the other hand Philo tells us, that the people spoke as commonly of good as of evil demons, worke de wyattes daineras no zazis diyusur oi nomoi. De Gigantibus, p. 286. ed. Paris. Philo however more frequently fpeaks the language and fentiments of the Platonic philosophers, than of the Jews.

many bad men became bad demons. Thales, Pythagoras, Plato, and the Stoics, as we learn from Plutarch*, reprefented "heroes as fouls feparated from "their bodies, and as being good or bad according "to their refpéctive characters." The Platonifts commonly held the very fame language with refpect to demons +. From fo early a writer as Ocellus Lucanus we learn, that "fuch as are begotten with in-"jury and intemperance, are wicked, and will be "evil demons ‡. And there is no notion which prevailed more generally over the Heathen world, from the earlieft ages, than that concerning the power of ghofts to haunt and torment mankind, particularly the ghofts of thofe who died a violent death II: which may

* De Placit, Phil. 1. 1. c. 8.

140

- + Plerique tamen ex Platonis magisterio, dæmones putant animas corporeo munere liberatas : laudabilium quoque virorum æthereos dæmones, improborum vero nocentes, Chalchid. in Platon. Tim. c. 135. p. 30. p. 330. Compare Origen contra Celf. l. 7. 334. Dr. Hammond on Matth. viii. 28. refers to Hieronymus Magius (Mifcell. l. 4. c. 12.) in proof of its having been the opinion of the ancients, that human fouls were turned into devils. But as I have never feen the works of that author, (which, I am informed, are in the Bodleian library at Oxford) I cannot tell what authority he cites.

‡ Ei 3 και γεννήσυσιν οι τοιύτοι μεθ ύδρεως, και άκρασίας, μοχθηροι οι γενόμενοι, και κακοδαίμονες έσονται. Ocellus Lucan. p. 532. ed. Galei.

|| In Horace's Epodes, 1. 5. ep. 5. v. 91. the boy whom the forcerefs intended to murther, thus menaces her,

Quin,

may eafily incline us to believe, that the doctrine of the philosophers concerning evil men's becoming evil demons after death, was the creed of the vulgar. From the Heathens, the fame or fimilar opinions paffed to the Jews, whole doctors taught *, " that the " fouls of the damned are for fome time changed in-" to devils, in order to be employed in tormenting " mankind." Josephus (as we have already feen +) affirms, that demons were the fouls of wicked men. Even Afmodeus (who is often defcribed as the prince of evil fpirits, and reckoned the very fame as Sammael and Belzebub) is reprefented by the Jews, as having for his mother Nahemah, the fifter of Tubal-Cain ‡. Some of them taught, that demons were the offspring of Sammael (the prince of demons) and Ever before Adam knew her: others faid, Adam was their father, and Lilith their mother ||: and fome

Quin, ubi perire jussus exspiravero,

Nocturnus occurram furor ;

Petamque vultus umbra curvis unguibus;

Quæ vis Deorum est Manium.

Compare Dido's threatening to Æneas, Virg. En. iv. 384; and what Tertullian fays concerning the aori and the biæothanati, whom the magicians invoked, De Anima, c. 57. p. 305.

* See Calmet's Dictionary, under the article Demon; and Theophylact as cited by Grotius on Mat. viii. 28.

+ Page 201.

† Elias Levita in Lexico suo.

|| See Calmet's Dictionary, under the article, Demon, Vandale de Origin. ac progressu idolat. p. 111, 112, 115, 116. Buxtorf's fome might affign them a still different origin. It was a common opinion, that demons were the degenerate fons of God described by Moses*, and their iffue by the daughters of men, the latter especially. To these they added the fouls of other wicked men. These were the demons with which they were best acquainted; of whom therefore they most frequently speak. Had Dr. Sykes and his opponents attended to these sentiments of antiquity; the former would not have found his account in denying, nor the latter in afferting, that demons, in the paffages in question. (from the Septuagint and the writings of St. Paul,) were wicked spirits: for when the Jews used the word in a bad fenfe, they underftood by it the fpirits of fuch wicked men as were thought to be changed into demons. So that whether the translators of the Old, and the writers of the New Testament, took the word in a good or a bad fenfe; the arguments urged above, to fhew that human fpirits were intended, hold good.

The Christian Fathers, inftead of contradicting the fentiments here advanced, (as is generally supposed) seem to me in some measure to confirm them. There is Buxtorf's Lexic. Chald. almud. Basnage's history of the Jews, Book IV. ch. 11.

* Gen. vi. 2. Some of the Jews miftook thefe fons of God for angels; as was obferved above, p. 42, n. *. Many thought that the angels were first corrupted by the love of women; as appears from the Apocryphal book of Enoch. See Calmet and Bafnage.

is no one point, that they more unanimoufly or firenuoufly maintain, than that all the Heathen deities had been men and women \*.  $\not\sim$

-

•

: 1

-

12

-

•

- ..

:1

, 7

-

.

.

1

.

1

. :

Here it will be objected, that the Fathers affert, " that the Heathen gods were demons +; and that " by demons they meant fallen angels." In order to our forming just conceptions of this subject, it will be necessfary to attend to the proper point, which the Fathers undertook to maintain against the Heathens: which was this, " that those beings whom the Hea-"thens regarded as gods, were demons ‡." It was an * Tertullian in his Apology, c. 10, 11. affirms, that Saturn and Jupiter, and the whole swarm of Heathen deities were men, and that they were represented as fuch by the Pagans themfelves, whole confciences would condemn them, if they did not allow all those whom they worthipped as gods, once to have been men, omnes istos deos vestros homines fuisse. See alfo c. 28, 29. According to Lactantius, l. 3. c. 15. their having no knowledge of any kings before Uranus and Saturn, is the reason why these were regarded as the most ancient divinities. St. Austin. (de civit. Dei, l. 6.) fays, Euhemerus, omnes tales deos, non fabulosa garrulitate, sed historica diligentia, homines fuisse, mortalesque conscripsit. Vide Minuc. Fel. c. 22. Lactant. L. I. c. 15. p. 85, 86. l. 2. c. 2. p. 146. Eufeb. de Vit. Conftant. l. 2. c. 16. l. 3. c. 26. Dem. Evang. l. 8. p. 364. Arnob. passim. According to Minucius Felix (p. 121. 122. ed. Davis.) Cyprian (de idol. vanit. p. 12.) and Auftin (de civ. Dei, 1. 8. c. 5, 27.) Leo, the Egyptian chief priest, discovered to Alexander the Great, that most of the Heathen gods had been men.

+ Δαιμόνια έντι οἱ 31οὶ τῶν ἔθνων. Juft. Mart. c. Trypho. p. 310.
 ‡ Thus Tertullian addreffes the Heathens, Ipfi putatis eos effe deos, quos nos demones fcimus. Ad Scap. init. c. 2. Juftin Martyr an article of the common creed amongst the Pagans, that the fouls of deified men were taken up into heaven, advanced to a state of divine dominion there, and ranked with the immortal gods *. Herein, their deification did properly consist. These gods were commonly regarded as good + beings, whose merit ‡

Martyr alfo, in his Apology, reproaches the Pagans with miftaking evil demons for gods. See Tertullian's Apol. c. 22. and de Anima, c. 57.

* Good demons inhabited the higher regions of the air. When they commenced gods, they were exalted to heaven. Diodorus Siculus (l. 1. p. 12. ed. Rhodomani) ranks the gods taken from earth with thole in heaven, αλλας in τότων [τῶν in ἐςωνῶ θιῶν] ἰπιγένες, x. τ. λ. Arces attigit igneas, Horace, Carm. l. 3. od. 3. v. 10. fays of Hercules. The Egyptian priefls (according to Plutarch de If. & Ofir. p. 359.) taught, that the fouls of their earthly gods, in ἐςωνῶ λάμπειν ἄσςω. They became immortal, according to the golden verfes afcribed to Pythagoras, בדסנמו מומיצד - שנים שנים מעלבסדסה, שד נדו שיאדלה.

The change from a demon into a god, is from a mutable, paffible, mortal nature, into a nature immutable, impaffible, and immortal, Plutarch de defect. Orac. p. 416. See also the paffage from Plutarch cited above, p. 182. and Cicer. de Nat. Deor. 1. 2. c. 24.

+ Menander fays, "We must not think any demon to be evil, hurtful to a good life, but every god to be good." And Euripides makes Iphigenia (in Taur. v. 391.) fay, Oiding yag eiuar danubrar firan zazór. Vid. Herc. fur. 1341.

‡ Quos in cælum merita vocaverint, colunto; was part of the Roman law. And from Cicero de Nat. Deor. we learn, that the cuflom was, Ut beneficiis excellentes viros in cælum fama & voluntate tollerent.

X

ż

Ŗ

.....

. 2

. .

.**

3

.

. E

:

::

2

:

Ņ,

۲.

17.

145

Digitized by Google

to mankind gave them a title to the honours of divinity. Now it is evident, that the Heathens might affert, and Christians deny, their defication; and at the fame time both of them allow, that they had once been men. When Christians affirmed, that the Heathen gods were demons, I acknowledge, that they used the word in a bad fense *, as they generally do on other occasions, and thought the Scriptures did †. But it will not necessfarily follow, from their using the word in a bad fense, that they applied it to fallen angels: for they might refer it to fuch human spirits as, in those ages, were thought to become evil and mischievous demons.

It must, however, be allowed, that they did believe, as the Heathens also did, in demons of a celeftial origin  $\pm$ , who had never been united to human bodies; and that feveral of them maintained, that these demons were the gods of the Heathens. And inasfmuch as the authority of these writers has been K often ## • Origen, c. Celf. 1. 8. p. 377, See alfo p. 234.

+ Id. l. 5. p. 234. Eufeb. Præp. Ev. l. 4. c. 5. St. Aug. de civ. Dei, l. 9. c. 19.

± Lactantius, II. 15, fays, "Trifmegiftus calls demons, evil angels: fo well was he acquainted with this, that they had been celeftial beings, but were depraved, and fo were become terreftrial." And in ch. 14, he affirms, "that there are two forts of demons, the one celeftial, the other terreftrial: that the latter are the authors of the ill things that are done, whofe prince is the devil, whom Trifmegiftus calls the demonarch" (prince of demons.)

146

often oppofed to (what we judge to be) the proper meaning of demons in the New Testament; it will be worth our while to inquire, what regard is due to it in the cafe before us. The Heathens did not worfhip any fuch beings as we call fallen angels : it was false therefore to affirm, that they did. The Fathers themfelves taught, that the Heathen gods had all been men: they contradicted themfelves therefore when they afferted, that they were a different order of beings. Nor is this the only inconfiftency with which they are chargeable, in relation to the prefent fubject. They very frequently boafted, that Christians could compel the Heathen gods to confess themselves to be demons; and that none of them dared to lie to a Christian *. Nevertheless these gods, inasmuch as they were human spirits, did lie to Christians, when they declared that they were celestial demons. The Fathers themselves constantly maintain+, that Saturn, Jupiter, Serapis, Æsculapius, and all the Heathen gods had been mortal men. Now if the Heathen gods had all been men, with what truth could they deny this, and call themfelves fallen angels? Tertullian tells us, * Edatur hic aliquis fub tribunalibus vestris, quem dæmone agi constet. Jussus a quolibet Christiano loqui spiritus ille, tam se dæmonem consitebitur de vero, quam alibi deum de salso. Dæmones—Christiano mentiri non audentes. Tertullian-Apol. c. 23. p. 22. Vide etiam Minuc, Fel. c. 27. Cyprian. ad Donat. p. 3. De Idol. Vanit. p. 10. Ad Demetrian. p. 133-Lactant. II. 15.

+ Tertullian. Apol. c. 23. Minucius Felix, c. 27. compared with the paffages cited above, p. 143, note *.

us, that the Heathen gods and demons were only different names of the fame beings*; and yet on other occafions, he reprefents the demons as perfonating † the Heathen gods: which manifeltly fuppofes that they were different beings. Lactantius ‡ affirms, that the very names by which the Heathen gods were worfhipped, were the names of demons; though the whole world knows, that they were the real names of men and women. Laftly, fuch of the primitive Chriftians as affert, that the gods of the Heathens were fallen angels, not only contradict certain and evident matter of fact, and their own avowed opinion of the Heathen gods; but they alfo contradict thofe facred writings, which reprefent them as nothing more than mortal men.

'n

Ą

ż

ť

1

0

ĩ

ł

s.

::

3

;

5

K 2

From

* Sed hactenus verba, jam hine demonstratio rei ipsius, qua -ostendemus unam esse utriusque nominis qualitatem. Apol. c. 23.

+ He speaks of a demon, sub personis defunctorum delitescentis. De Anima, c. 57.

‡ "They not only confess themselves to be demons, but "also declare their own names by which they are worshipped "in the temples. Lactant. II. 15. Justin Martyr fays, that ''impure spirits under various apparitions went in unto the "daughters of men, and defiled boys; and that each of them "was invoked by such a name as he had given to himself." Apol. I. p. 10. ed. Tirlb. He imagined Jupiter, Apollo, &c. were the proper names of the demons: but Tertullian seems to have thought, the demons only procured themselves to be worshipped under those names; which belonged to deceased men and women.

From the Scriptures, it is plain, the Fathers did not borrow their fentiments concerning the Heathen gods. The facred writers do, perhaps, brand as evil demons, those whom the Heathens regarded as worthies, and worfhipped as gods: but they never reprefent fallen angels as the gods of Paganism, nor as perfonating those gods, nor as paffing under the fame Why then has the language of the Fathers names. on this fubject, been adopted by all fucceeding ages, with the reverence due only to that of immediate infpiration? Though I do not remember to have feen it taken notice of by others; yet it feems highly probable, that this language was borrowed from the Pagan philosophers. Several of the latter afferted, 'as the former did, that those beings whom the Heathen world worshipped as gods, were evil demons. Both of them, in support of this affertion, urged the fame arguments; fuch as the actions afcribed to the Heathen gods, the rites appointed to placate them, and their opposition to the cause of true piety. Both taught that evil demons were fpirits of a celeftial origin; and that they were infpirers and authors of prophecies and miracles *. Nor can we wonder, that the * Plutarch (in his treatife de If. & Ofir. p. 360. ed. Paris. 1624.) mentions it as the opinion of the moft ancient theologifts, and declares his own approbation of it; that what is related of Ofiris and Ifis, and other hero deities, is not to be confidered as an account either of gods, or of men; but of ceitain great demons, who transcend mankind in power, but, like them, have a mixture of vice in their character. And in his book d: Oraculorum defectu, (p. 417.) he argues from the obficenity

148

-11

1 iai

2 7

11

, x

há Từ

S ( )

Ľ,r and i

17

.

10

ller

. 1

1

he E

1

1

1

: 3

1

::: :::::

, . . .

: و ي 149

the Fathers should be too ready to adopt the fentiments and language of the philosophers. They had been educated in the schools of Pagan philosophy: and who can make sufficient allowance for the prejudices of education? Certain it is in fact, that upon K 3 their nity, cruelty and folly of the worship paid to the gods, that it was inflituted to avert the wrath of wicked demons. Compare Plutarch de If. & Osir. p. 361. Porphyry (de Abstin. sect. 36, 37. p. 80, 81.) fays, that a man who is studious of piety, does not offer animal facrifices to the gods, daipoor di, but to de-He defcribes wicked demons, very much in the manner mons. the Fathers do, as endeavouring to draw the regards of mankind to themfelves, as being ambitious of paffing for gods, and as calumniating the best deity, the derson Stor. Sect. 39, 40, 42. p. 83, 84, 85, 86. He affirms, as the Fathers do, that evil demons are nourished by libations and the steams of the facrifices, fect. 42. p. 86, and that they perfonate the gods, fect. 40. p. 84. Philo, who was more properly a Platonist than a Jew, had faid long before, that " evil fpirits usurp the names of angels." De Gigantibus, p. 286. C. ed. Paris. Porphyry (fect. 41. p. 85.) ascribes the whole efficacy of magic to the power of evil demons; as the Fathers likewife did. There is no ground to affert, that Porphyry borrowed his notions from the Christians, to whom he bore an implacable hatred. He fpeaks agreeably to the principles of the Pythagorean and Platonic philosophy; nor does he advance any new doctrine. Jamblichus delivers the like fentiments concerning evil demons (de Mysteriis, Segm. 3. c. 32. et passim.) with Porphyry; profeffing at the fame time to have borrowed them from the Chaldeans; to whom (I apprehend) they of right belong. J. Ger. Voffius, in his book de sectis philosophorum, says, Mea autem hæc fententia; non posse aliunde melius, quam ex hoc opere, quid et Platonici de divinis rebus senserint, cognosci. Ægyp-~ tiorum et Chaldæorum opinionem exprimit. Voffius is here speaking of Jamblichus de Mysteriis.

IŢĠ

their embracing Christianity, though they adopted fome new opinions, they dropt very few of their old ones; and in too many inftances, inftead of rectifying their preconceived opinions by the Scriptures, tortured the Scriptures (as all men are apt to do) to fupport their preconceived opinions. In the cafe under our present confideration; they were not perhaps governed entirely by prejudices of their own; they are suspected at least of acting in some measure from a principle of conformity to the prejudices of others; (as will be fhewn in the fequel.) However this may be; they ought not to have countenanced an opinion, that was repugnant to revelation, as well as to the common fense of mankind, and supported merely by the authority of the most superstinious of all the Pagan philosophers.

Notwithstanding the attachment of the Fathers to the Pagan fystem of demonology; some of them maintain, and Justin Martyr in particular, that demons were "the fouls of dead men *." When this learned writer is proving, that the foul does not die with the body, he argues from the cafe " of those "who are feized and tormented by the fouls of the "deceased, whom all call demoniacs and madmen +." Athenagoras, who flourished in the second century, as Justin also did, reckons " the fouls of the giants amongst * +vxai anotavorlav.

+ Οι ψυχαϊς ἀποθανόνθων λαμβανόμενοι, κỳ ριπθέμενοι ἀνθρωποι, ές δαιμονολήπθες και μαινομένες καλέσι πάντες. Apol. 1. al. 2. p. 65. Paris. 1620. p. 54. ed. Bened. p. 27. ed. Thirlb.

amongst the demons *." Tatian, indeed, who believed that the human foul dies, could not allow, that any human fouls became demons +: but his reafoning against this notion, is a proof that it was entertained by others. Tertullian likewife conceived the flate of the foul after the death of the body, to be fuch as ill confifted with the idea of demons, who wandered about in the region of the air near the Accordingly we find, that he fpeaks princiearth. pally of fuch demons as were never united to human bodies. Neverthelefs, even from Tertullian it appears, that there was a current belief in his time of demons that had once been men; and that he himfelf did not wholly reject them. He tells us in his Apology, that "from a corrupted flock of angels, there fprung " a still more degenerate race of demons t." It is univerfally allowed, that Tertullian here refers to the fons of God in the hiftory of Mofes ||, who mixed with the daughters of men, and who were believed to be angels by Tertullian, and by almost all the Fa-K 4 thers

* ____ κỳ αἰ τῶν γιγάντων ψυχαὶ, οἱ περὶ τὸν κόσμον ἐισὶ πλανώμενοι δαίμονες. Athenag. Apol. p. 28. B.

† Tatian (Orat. contr. Græcos, p. 154.) fays, "Demons are not the fouls of men :" and (p. 148.) he affirms, "that they were ejected from the heavenly conversation."

‡ Sed quomodo de angelis quibuídam, fua sponte corruptis, corruptior gens dæmonum evaserit, &c. Tertullian. Apol.
c. 22. p. 21.

Digitized by Google

|| Gen. vi. 2.

-

11

÷

- 1178

ļ, `.

e 6

Ţ

**(¶.

er.

:0

1. T

35 F.

2.7

23

- ----

t de

.:]`

ici i Fili

C -

1

Ċ,

. .

thers of the four first centuries *, upon the authority of Philo, Josephus, and the ancient editions of the feptuagint, which had fubstituted the angels of God, instead of the fons of God. So that according to Tertullian, and I believe I may fay, according to the general fenfe of those ages, the worst kind of demons are in part, at least, of human original. In another place, however, Tertullian expresses himself in the following manner +: " We difcover (if I be not mif-" taken) the fallacy of an evil fpirit, lurking under " the mafks of dead men, by facts; when, during " his being exorcifed, he fometimes affirms himfelf " to have been a man, one of our progenitors, fome-" times a gladiator, or one who fought with wild " beafts t, as elfewhere he would fay he was a god ; " being concerned for nothing more than this, that "he * See Whitby's Strictur. Patrum, in Gen. c. vi. 4. p. 5. Some think the Fathers were drawn into this error, by the authority of the apocryphal book of Enoch.

† Hanc quoque fallaciam fpiritus nequam fub perfonis defunctorum delitefcentis, nifi fallor, etiam rebus probamus, quum in exorcifmis interdum aliquem fe ex parentibus hominem fuis affirmat, interdum gladiatorem, vel beftiarium, ficut et alibi deum; nihil magis curans, quam hoc ipfum excludere quod prædicamus, ne facile credamus animas univerfas ad inferos redigi, ut et judicii et refurrectionis fidem turbet. Et tamen ille dæmon poftquam circumftantes circumvenire tentavit, inftantia divinæ gratiæ victus, id quod in vero eft, invitus confitebitur. Tertullian de Anima, c. 57. p. 305, 306. ed. Paris.

‡ This confirms what is observed above, p. 141. and below, p. 155. concerning such as suffered a violent death.

152

" he may contradict what we preach, and prevent " us from believing that all fouls go to the fhades " below "; and this in order to diffurb our faith of " a judgment and a refurrection. Yet will this de-" mon, after he has tried to delude the company, <sup>56</sup> be fo far over-ruled by the prefence of divine grace, " as unwillingly to confess himself to be what he " really is." Tertullian here contradicts what he himfelf elfewhere advances concerning those demons, who were the iffue of the daughters of men; as wellas what he afferts with respect to the power of Chriftians, to compel demons to declare what they truly were, and to prevent them from telling lyes in their prefence. For here a demon, though in the end he owns his real character, is guilty of lying, even under the exorcifm of Christians, by afferting he had been a man. It is more material to obferve farther, 1ft, That it must have been at that time a very com-, mon opinion, that demons were the fouls of dead men: for otherwife this evil fpirit would not have been reprefented as affirming, that he had been a man. adly, The reafon affigned by Tertullian for rejecting this opinion, was his believing that all fouls remained in the shades below till the day of judgment: which is mentioned amongst the errors and paradoxes + of this learned writer; and therefore could have no weight

• Or, to bades, the region underneath the earth : which according to many of the Heathens, as well as Tertullian, was the region of the dead.

+ See Tertullian, p. 306. note b, ed. Paris.

154

weight with those Christians, who taught, that human fouls either ascended the etherial regions, or wandered about the earth, according to their respective characters.

The fentiments concerning the ftate of feparate fouls, which were entertained by Christians in general, and by Origen in particular, the most learned of all the Fathers, were very different from those of Tertullian. Near the beginning of his feventh book against Celfus, Origen undertakes to shew, that the ancient oracles were not inspired by any gods, as the Heathen's commonly thought, but on the contrary by evil demons *. In proof of this point, he obferves +, (amongst other things,) " that all men, " whether Jews or Christians, Greeks or Barba-" rians, believe that the human foul furvives the dif-" folution of the body: that it is agreeable to rea-" fon to think, that the pure foul ascends the pure re-" gions of ether, leaving the grofs body, and its pol-" lutions behind; but that the wicked foul is borne " downwards by its fins, flying about the earth, or " living near fepulchres." He then afks the following question t: "What fort of spirits should we " judge those to be, which are tied down whole ages. " as one may fay, to particular buildings or places. " either by certain charms, or by their own wicked-" nefs?" that is, Are they fuch purified human fpirits as reafon tells us afcend the fublimer regions, and

* Page 333,

+ Page 334.

Digitized by Google

‡ Подажа хей гория стан жийрата, г. т. л. Ib.

and the Heathens effeem as gods; or are they those polluted human spirits who are detained near this lower earth, and are evil demons? This question does not appear to concern any but human fpirits; no mention having been made of any other. Origen refolves this queftion in the following manner :---" Reafon tells us, that they ought to be regarded as " wicked fpirits, who ufe prophecy (a thing of an " indifferent nature in itfelf) to deceive mankind, " and to draw them from the pure worthip of God "." There has been occasion to obscrve, that the ancients were of opinion, not only that wicked human fpirits became demons, but also that " those who fuffered a violent death became fuch." Now from St. Chryfoltom we learn, that even this was the belief of the meaner people in his time +. And had it not, at that time, been generally thought, that demons were the fouls of the deccafed; would demoniacs have , faid, as from the fame author we learn they did, that " they were poffeffed by the foul of fuch or fuch a monk t?"

The forecited paffages from the Fathers appear to me to contain a fufficient proof, that whatever they teach * Ibid.

+ Πολλοί τῶν ἀφιλιςίζων νομίζεσι τὰς ψυχὰς τῶν βιαίω θανάτω τελευτῶντων δαίμονας γινεθαι. De Laz. Serm. 2. tom. 1. p. 727. E.

‡ Τί ἐν, ὅτι οἰ δαίμοιις λέγκσι, τῦ μοιαχῦ τῦ δἔιτος ἡ ψυχή ἀμά, φησι, Chryfolt. de Lazaro, tom. I. p. 728. Αὐτοί, φησιν, οἰ δαιμοιῶντις βοασιν, ὅτι ψυχή τῦ δἔιτος ἐγώ. In Matt. hom. 28. al. 29. tom. 7. p. 336. C.

156

teach concerning the miraculous powers and operations of celestial demons, was borrowed from the Pagans: that many of them did affert, that fome human fouls after the diffolution of their bodies became demons: and that for feveral ages after the coming of Chrift, demons did very commonly denote fuch human fouls; agreeably to the meaning affixed to them by the ancient Heathens and Jews, and by the apostles of Christ. The writings of the Eathers, therefore, inftead of deftroying, do in fome measure confirm the explication we have given of the demons mentioned in Scripture, as the objects of Pagan devotion. At the fame time, they bear express testimony to this great truth, (the establishment of which has been our main view, in what has been hitherto advanced in this fection,) that all the Heathen gods, except the deified parts and powers of nature, belonged to the human race. The forming a true idea. of the Heathen gods, being a matter of no fmall importance to a just defence of the Scripture; we hope to be excufed, for having taken up fo much time in difcuffing it.

If the foregoing account of the Pagan gods be juft; there will be no difficulty, in vindicating the cenfures paffed upon them in the facred writings. With regard to the parts and powers of nature, which the Heathen world deified; they are reprefented in Scripture as the creatures of God's power, and the paffive inftruments of his decrees *. Even " the fun, " and * See above, p. 97.

" and the moon, and the ftars, and all the hoft of " heaven," however revered by the Pagans as the chief deities; " the Israelites are forbidden to wor-" fhip and ferve; becaufe Jehovah, their God, pla-" ced them in the firmament of heaven;" not for the ufe of any one particular nation, but " for the com-" mon benefit of the whole human race "." Ir. is extraordinary that Mofes, at a time when the world was univerfally regarded as animated and divine, and the elements and the heavenly bodies were thought to poffefs an internal power to exert themfelves in all their admirable effects; it is very extraordinary, that Mofes, at this time, fhould discover, publish, and (by fuitable miracles) confirm the oppofite doctrine. His doctrine is perfectly agreeable to the modern philosophy, which represents the whole natural world as a merely material, inert, inactive thing, without any wildom or power of its own, and refilting any change of ftate, whether of reft or motion; and which must therefore be continually upheld and directed by the wildom and power of God, to whom the whole train of natural caufes and effects is to be afcribed. The doctrine alone of Mofes. fo remote from the fentiments and philosophy of his age, and fo agreeable to truth, creates a ftrong prefumption of his having received it by immediate revelation.

As to the other gods of Paganism, whether they were such human souls as became demons, or (as fome fome apprehend) created spirits of a superior order; we have already * feen, that the Scriprure gives us fuch a view of them, as is inconfistent either with their infpiring prophecies or working miracles. And it will be fhewn in the fequel, that all fupernatural effects are referred to God alone by the facred writers. Is it poffible for them to contradict themselves; as they mult do, if they afcribe fuch effects to the Heathen gods? But fo far are they from doing this; that they constantly represent those gods as utterly impotent and infignificant; either as having no real existence, or no more power than if they did not exist. They call them vanities +, things of no kind of value or efficacy. Nor is this centure confined to a part only of the Heathen gods; it is extended to all, without a fingle exception. " They are ALL vanity t." " ALL the gods of the nations are idols, or nothings ":" not powerful evil fpirits, but mere nullities. In this manner, the ancient prophets of God spoke of the Pagan deities; and the apostles of Chrift used the fame language: " We know that an " idol

* Deut. iv. 19. compared with Gen. i. 17.

157

* Ch. 3. sect. 1.

+ Deut. xxxii. 21. I King. xvi. 13, 26. Jerem. viii. 19. ch. xiv. 22. ch. xviii. 15. In t Sam. xii. 21. they are called "vain things which cannot profit." They are called "lying vanities," Pf. xxxi. 6.

1 If. xli. 29. Jerem. x. 8.

[] Heb. Elilim, nothings, or things of no value. Pf. xcvi. 5. ' (Compare Job xiii. 4.) See alfo Levit. xix. 4. 1 Chron. xvi. 26. Ezek. xxx. 13. and compare 1 Kings xviii. 27. If. xlv. 5.

Digitized by Google

158

1 2

" idol is nothing in the world "." This is not to be underftood of the mere images of the gods: for the Heathens did not regard those images, in themselves confidered, as real gods. They believed them to be the representatives and the receptacles + of their gods, and in this view they fpoke of them as gods, and the objects of divine worfhip; and it is in reference to the divine powers supposed to refide in them, that the Scriptures affirm, that they are nothing. On all occasions, the facred writers deride these pretended refidences of the Heathen deities, as mere earthly materials, polifhed by the hand of the artificer, and the deities themfelves as equally void of understanding, or rather as being nothing diffinct from those fenselefs materials, and exifting only in the imagination of their deluded worshippers. " The stock is a doc-" trine of vanities t." " Their idols are filver and " gold, or wood and stone, the work of mens hands, " which neither fee, nor hear, nor eat, nor fmell "." Agreeably hereto the Scripture reprefents the votaries of these divinities as perfons utterly lost to reason, and

* 1 Cor. viii. 4. ch. x. 19.

+ Various ceremonies were uled, to induce the gods to take up their refidence in the temples and statues erected to receive them. See Arnob. 1. 6. p. 203, 207. Sozom. H. E. 1. 7. p. 724. Origen, c. Celf. 1. 7. p. 378.

† Jerem. x. 8.

|| Deut. iv. 28. Pf. xcvii. 7. Pf. cxv. 4. Pf. cxxxv. 15. If. xl. 18. ch. xlii. 17. ch. xliv. 9. Jerem. ii. 27. ch. x. 3. Dan. v. 4, 23. Habak. ii. 18. Acts xviii. 29. 1 Cor. viii. 4. ch. x. 19. ch. xii. 2. 1 Theff. i. 9.

and without a fhadow of excufe. " They are altogether brutifh and foolifh," and difcover no more underftanding than the idols they make *.

Oracles, prophecies, prodigies were ascribed by the Heathens to their demons: and on their favour the good or evil state of mens lives was thought to de-This perfuafion was the ground of their worpend. ship. And the proper point in dispute between idolaters and the prophets of the true God, was, whether that perfuasion was supported by facts. We find the meffengers of God challenging idolaters, to justify their worfhip of idols; and the idol gods themfelves, to give proof of their divinity, by a difplay of knowledge, or by fome exertion of power, fuch as was either hurtful or beneficial to mankind; and even admitting, that by such a display of their power or knowledge, the Heathen deities would have eftablifhed their claim to divinity, and their title to the homage of mankind. " Produce your caufe, faith " the Lord, bring forth your strong reasons .-- Let " them shew the former things what they be, that " we may confider them, and know the latter end " of them :" produce your ancient oracles, that we may judge whether they were fulfilled by correspondent events; or, now " declare to us things for to " come. Shew us things for to come hereafter, that " we may know that ye are gods; yea, do good, or " do evil, that we may be difmayed," that it may appear appear ye have, what your votaries affert, a title to the reverence and worfhip of mankind. " Behold, ye are nothing, and your work of nought *;" and therefore there can be no fhadow of reason for paying you homage. How very different is this language of the ancient prophets, from that of our learned moderns, who tell us, that idolatry cannot poffibly be justified by any miracles, however numerous or fplendid; and that whatever power over mankind the Heathen gods might poffers, they could have no right to worfhip? The prophets would have allowed their title to worfhip, had they admitted their power +. Their utter impotence is the only reafon of the Scripture's remonstrating against paying them homage. I add, that these remonstrances of Scripture, which are frequently repeated t, are confirmed by facts, by many striking testimonies of the utter inability of the Heathen deities, to interpole either for the conviction of gainfayers, or for the benefit of their worfhippers, or in vindication of their own hon-They could not interpret Nebuchadnezzar's our. dream ||, nor the hand-writing upon the wall of Belfhazzar's Ľ

* Jerem. x. 8. Pf. cxv. 8. Pf. cxxxv. 18. Habak. ii. 18, 19.

160

* If. xli. 21, 24.

† The reasoning urged above, p. 76, 77, 78, may ferve to justify the decision of this case by the prophets.

‡ Jerem. x. 3, 5, 15. If. xliii. 8. ch. xliv. 7. ch. xlv. 16, 20. ch. xlvi. 5. ch. xlviii. 3. 1 Cor. viii. 4. ch. x. 19. ch.
xii. 2. 1 Theff. i. 9.

|| Dan. iv. 7.

161

fhazzar's palace *; nor were they able to answer by fire, in the public trial between their own prophets, and the prophet of Jehovah +; though on these feveral occasions, but especially the last, all their credit was at stake. Nor did they oppose (how much foever it might be their interest to do it) any miracles of their own, to those either of Moses or the Messiah; as we hope to shew in the sequel.

In opposition to all this evidence, it has been afferted, that the fystem of Pagan idolatry was supported by prophecies and miracles, delivered and performed, not by the fictitious deities of the Heathens, but by devils, or wicked demons of a higher order than mankind, who perforated the gods, lurked within their confectated images and statues, inspired the vates, animated the fibres of the entrails of victims, governed

* Dan. v. 7.

+ 1 Kings xviii. If fpirits (as learned men have affirmed) can do invifibly, all that men can do vifibly; why, in the conteft related in this chapter, did not evil fpirits bring fire in a fecret manner from fome neighbouring place to the altar, to confume what was laid upon it? There feems to be no peculiar difficulty in fuch a miracle.

4

à

ł

Should any object to what is here urged concerning the impotence of the Heathen gods, that in 2 Cbron. xxviii. 23, the facred hiftorian is reprefented as faying, that " the gods of Damafcus fmote Ahaz :" I anfwer in the words of Mr. Halett (V. 2. p. 79.) " All this difficulty is avoided, if we follow the " old Hebrew copies, from which the Greek translation was " made, which reads thus, And king Ahaz faid, I will feek to " the gods of Damafcus who fmote me."

Digitized by Google

162

governed the flight of birds, guided the lots, framed the oracles, and exerted themfelves to the utmost in promoting idolatry, in order to involve men in the guilt of it, to draw all adoration to themfelves, to fecure proper food and nourishment from the rich steams and blood of the victims, which were offered to them, and hereby to ftrengthen theinfelves for the enjoyment of their luftful pleafures with boys and women. It has been farther afferted, that these wicked spirits were, properly fpeaking, the gods of the Heathens; rather than those imaginary beings, whom they feemed to themfelves to worship. In support of these affertions, appeal is made to the writings of the Fathers, and the authority of Scripture.

For the honour of human nature, who would not wifh that fuch extravagant opinions as thefe had never been broached by any writers? Neverthelefs, it must be owned, they are clearly contained in the writings of the Fathers +. These opinions however are there only afferted, not proved ; and perhaps were never really believed, by the very perfons who maintained them, and upon whole authority alone they have been received in fucceeding ages. For the Fathers, though they fometimes taught, or allowed, that Pagan

L 2

+ Justin Mart. Apol. p. 113. ed. Thirlb. Tertullian de anima, c. 57. Minucius Felix, c. 27. Cyprian de Idolor. Van. p. 206. Arnob. c. Gent. l. 1. 26. Lactant. de Orig. Error. l. 2. c. 16. De vera Sapient. 1. 8. c. 16. ed. Spark, p. 399. Eufeb. Præp. Ev. 1. 5. c. 4. St. August. de Civ. Dei, 1. 8. c. 16. See also Middleton's Free Inquiry, p. 66, 70, 77. and Mede's works, p. 680, 681.

Pagan idolatry was supported by oracles and miracles; do nevertheless on other occasions confess or clearly intimate, that Paganifm had no other fupport, than human craft and imposture*. They pretended, indeed, that any Christian was able to compel the Heathen gods to confess themselves to be devils, as well as to eject + them from the bodies of men; but every one now knows, that there was no miracle ‡ in the cafe. 'To me it feems to be a matter of no great importance, what fentiments the Fathers entertained on the fubject under our confideration; and therefore we will proceed to examine those of the facred writers. Several general reafons have been already || fuggested, to shew how unlikely it is, that the Scriptures should affert or allow, that idolatry was supported by the miraculous interposition of any wicked spirits; whether they did or did not counterfeit the fouls of men * Origen, c. Celf. p. 333. Eufeb. Præp. 1. 4. c. 1, 2, 3. Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. 1. 3. See Fontenelle's Hift. of Oracles, ch. 9. p. 76. and Clerici Hift. Ecclef. prolegom. p. 54. With regard to the refidence of invifible beings in the confectated images of the Heathens; it is frequently treated by the ancient apologifts with the foorn it fo well deferved. See Arnob. 1. 6. p. 200. Lactant. 1. 2. p. 147. Perhaps one reafon why on fome occasions the Fathers allow, that Paganifm was fupported by miracles, was their finding the Pagans more difpoled to refer them to evil agents, than to difbelieve their reality.

+ See Dr. Whitby's general preface to the epifiles, p. xxvi.

‡ See Dr. Middleton's Free Inquiry, p. 8c, &c.

|| See above, p. 157.

men deceafed. To what has been already offered, I would add the few following observations on the case before us.

ift, The Scripture has never given the leaft intimation, that the gods of the Heathens were of two different kinds, the one fuch as they feemed to them felves to worship, the other the real objects of their devo-Much lefs has the Scripture afferted or intition. mated, that, though the former were utterly impotent, the latter were powerful wicked spirits, who were always promoting idolatry by prophecies, prodigies, and miracles. Now, is it credible, that the prophets of God, who were in the higheft degree anxious for the welfare of the Ifraelites, should never give them any notice of their hourly danger from fuch powerful demons? and that they should tell the people, they had nothing to fear or hope from the gods they were fo prone to worfhip; without dropping a fingle hint that those gods had a thousand abettors, who were allowed to work miracles, in order to involve them in the guilt of idolatry? This will appear still more incredible, if we confider, 2dly, That had the claims of the Heathen deities been supported by other invisible agents, affuming their names, and acting their parts : this would have been the very fame thing, to the apprehensions of mankind, as if those deities had themselves interposed in support of their own divinity. For had miracles been performed in the name of the Heathen gods: the spectators must have referred them to those gods; rather than to any other beings, of whom they were entirely ignorant. And if to the spectators, the Heathen gods necessarily appeared

L 3

tq

Digitized by Google.

165

166

to poffefs a miraculous power; would not this have produced, and very justly too, the fame effect as if they had really poffeffed it? If the exercise therefore of this power, for the benefit or to the prejudice of mankind, by the idol gods, would have justified the worship of them, (as the prophets of God allow it would;) the exercise of the same power by others, under the circumstances here fupposed, would have done fo too. 3dly, The prophets of God could not with truth or fincerity affirm, that apostate angels were, properly speaking, the gods of the Heathens; because they represent their gods as dead men. Nor do they fpeak of them in this manner, in order to accommodate themfelves to the common opinion of the Heathens concerning them, as fome have imagined *; for the Heathens regarded them as deified fouls of their worthies. They call them dead men; because they were really and truly fuch ; and not evil spirits masking themfelves under their names. 4thly, They could not without the groffest violation of truth, represent the statues and images of the Heathen deities as mere fenfeless materials, if they were inhabited by any spiritual beings whatsoever. 5thly, Most fallacious and dangerous would it have been in the prophets, to inculcate it perpetually upon the Ifraelites as a most certain and evident truth, that all the Heathen gods were imaginary beings, who had no existence, or no degree of power over mankind; without informing them at the fame time, (what it concerned them

* See above, p. 132.

them much to know, if it was true,) that the real objects of the Heathen worship, were possesfied even of miraculous powers, which they were continually exerting to the deception of the human race. This would have been egregious triffing on a most folemn occasion, and gross prevarication: it would have been not only leaving the people in ignorance of their danger, but deceiving them into a false and fatal opinion of their fafety. Include in the number of the Heathen gods whatever fpirits you pleafe, apostate angels of every rank and order, as well as human fouls; that declaration of God must hold true, " They are all vanicy, their works are nothing *." If you chuse to fay, that the prophets of God conceived the Heathen deities to be devils, in the fense in which the word is used at prefent; you make them deny, that devils have any power at all: for in reference to all the Heathen deities, they thus admonish the Israelites, " Be not afraid of them, for they " cannot do evil, neither alfo is it in them to do " good †."

It is true, indeed, that both according to the ancient and modern verfions of the Bible, the Heathen gods are reprefented as devils in that facred volume. But these versions do great injustice to the original; if by devils you mean a diffinct order of beings from human fouls. Let us examine the feveral paffages, where the Heathen gods are described as devils, in the English translation. Mofes,

L 4

Isaiah xli. 29.

+ Jerem. x.s.

Mofes, in his prophetic hymn concerning the apoftacy of the Israelites, takes notice of it as a proof and aggravation of their idolatrous difpolition, " that they facrificed unto devils," (schedim,) whom he calls " new gods that came newly up, whom they " knew not, and their fathers feared not *." The Pfalmist in like manner thus reproaches them: "Yea, they facrificed their fons and their daughters " unto devils +," (schedim). If all the Pagan gods were devils, why are the fchedim diftinguished from their other gods? Why are they called new to the Ifraelites, who had of old worfhipped the Pagan deities t? Why is the worship of these fchedim mentioned as matter of peculiar reproach? And if these fchedim were devils, who have a real and extensive power over mankind; why are they called vanities and idols ||? The word, schedim, is derived from a verb & which fignifies to lay waste, to destroy, and ought to have been rendered, the destroyers. It expreffes the fuppofed cruel nature and character of these false gods, who were thought to delight in, and who were accordingly worfhipped by, the deftruction of the human species, and who required, as appears from the context, even " the blood of their fons

- * Deut. xxxii. 17.
- + Pf. cvi. 37.

‡ Gen. xxxv. 2, 4. Jofh. xxiy. 2.

- || Deut. xxxii. 21. Pl. cvi. 36.
- שדד §

fons and daughters *." Who the gods were, that were worfhipped by human facrifices, all hiftory informs us; and fo has the Pfalmist in the most exprefs terms +, " They ate the facrifices of the dead." They were the great warriors, who in their mortal fate delighted in the flaughter of the human race. The revolt of the Israelites from the worship of God their Saviour, to that of these wasters and destroyers of mankind, argued the highest degree of folly and wickednefs. This worfhip was new to the Ifraelites, what they had never practifed either in Egypt, or before they went into that country; but what they afterwards learnt of the Canaanites. Accordingly the fchedim are expressly called by the Pfalmift, " the idols of Canaan 1." What one circumstance is there that can lead us to suppose, that either Moses or the Pfalmist, in the forecited passages, are speaking of devils, in the common acceptation of that word?

The fame defect either of candour or judgment, our translators have shewn in the explication of another word, which they render devils. "They shall "no more offer their facrifices unto devils," feirim, or, fehirim 1. This prohibition of Moses to the Israelites after they had left Egypt, implies that they had, during their stay there, defiled themselves with that

* Pfalm cvi. 38.

† V. 28. See the learned Mr. Merrick's annotations on the Pfalms, p. 218.

‡ Pfalm cvi. 38.

|| Levit. xvii. 7.

169

!

170

that particular fpecies of idolatry here condemned. And from other paffages of Scripture, it fufficiently appears, that the Ifraelites were no ftrangers to the worship of the Egyptian deities *. It is allowed, that the word', feirim, fignifies hairy beings, or goats +. And the learned Bochart t has fully shewn, that the facred animals of Egypt were bairy; and that the goat in particular was worfhipped, (on the fame account as Priapus was amongst the Greeks;) and that Pan was represented under the image of this animal. It is plain, therefore, that as the schedim were the idols of Canaan, fo the feirim were the idols of Egypt. This will more clearly appear from another place in which this latter word occurs : " He (Jero-" boam) ordained him priests for the high places, " and for the devils, (feirim, the goats,) and for the " calves he had made "." Did Jeroboam make devils, * Joth. xxiv. 14. Ezek. xx. 7. ch. xxiii. 2, 3. Acts viii. 39.

† In Levit. iv. and ch. xvi. and other places, it fignifies a goat. In many places it fignifies bair or bairy. Lev. xiii. 10, 25, 26, 30, 32. Gen. xxv. 25. Pfalm lxviii. 21. The word alfo occurs, If. xiii. 21. where the prophet is foretelling the utter deftruction and defolation of Babylon: "The fatyrs," the feirim, "the goats or hairy creatures fhall dance there;" i. e. it fhall be inhabited by beafts, and not men. And in If. xxxiv. 14. this word is rendered fatyrs, where the prophet is defcribing the defolation of Idumea, reprefenting it as the haunt of goats and other wild beafts.

‡ Hieroz. l. 2. c. 53.

2 Chron. xi. 15.

vils, or the flatues and images of devils? The word, feirim, (goats,) no more fignifies devils, than the original word translated calves, or any other word throughout the Bible. Some very learned + men indeed plead, that devils were reprefented by goats, because they appeared to mankind in the form of these animals. But, till they produce some better authority, than the reports of witches, and the fables of the Heathens concerning fauns and fatyrs, in proof of the devil's appearing in the shape of goats; this plea cannot be admitted. What the historian affirms, is plainly this; that Jeroboam lately returned from Egypt, established the worship of the deities of that country, which was eminently that of goats and calves; or at leaft fet up the images of these animals as fymbols of the Divinity. There could be no reference to devils, as this word is now underftood; because the Israelites are never charged by their prophets, with fo detestable a fpecies of idolatry, as the worship of devils. The institution of such worship would not have fuited with the policy of Jeroboam, who was defirous of attaching the Ifraelites to himfelf. Nor did the Egyptians, whole example Jeroboam copied, ever represent devils under the figures of goats and calves.

With regard to the paffages in the New Testament, in which the Heathen gods are styled devils, or (according to the original) demons ‡; it has already been shewn,

- + See Patrick in particular:
- ‡ 1 Cor. x. 20, 21, cited above, p. 135.

fhewn \*, that thereby we are to understand fuch human fpirits as were supposed to be converted into demons. It is fearce necessary to observe, that when St. Paul in these passages calls the objects of Pagan worship, demons, and in other places, gods and lords +; it is merely for the fake of describing them by their usual appellations, or to express what the Heathens believed them to be; without having any intention of allowing them any real power or divinity: for he elsewhere upbraids them as vanities  $\ddagger$ , and mere nullities  $\parallel$ . This likewise is the view which all the facred writers give us of the gods of Paganism : a view abfolutely inconfistent with their possibility appeared of working miracles.

SECT,

* Page 135, 136.

+ "There be gods many, and lords many," i. e. fuch as are fo called, 1 Cor. viii. 5. The lords here fpoken of, anfwer to Baalim in the Old Teftament, and to demons in the New; the fuppofed difpenfers of good and evil according to the Pagans. But Christians acknowlege only one God, and one Lord.

Digitized by Google

‡ Acts xiv. 15.

|| I Cor. viii. 4, 5, 6.

SECT. III.

The character and pretensions of the magicians, diviners and forcerers of antiquity, examined; with the Scripture account concerning them. And the various pleas alledged by Christians in support of the credit, and efficacy of the ancient magic, refuted.

T will be my business in this section to shew, that the magicians, diviners and forcerers of antiquity, -. who pretended, by the affiftance of the Heathen deities, to foretel future events or to work miracles, are branded in Scripture as mere impostors, incapable of fupporting their pretenfions by any works or predictions beyond human power or fkill. It is natural to fuppofe this, from what has been advanced in the foregoing section; but it will a nit of a much fuller confirmation. In order to our clearly difcerning the justice, with which the Scriptures cenfure and explode all the Pagan pretences to prophecy and miracles; it will not be improper to investigate the false principles upon which they were founded, the knowlege of which will be of fervice to us on feveral occafions, in the fequel of the argument.

The magi were originally the priefts of the gods *, and * Plato's Alcibiades, l. Lucian ir Μαχεοδίοις. Porphyry, in his book, de Abstinent. l. 4. § 16, fays, Παξά γε μέν τοῖς Πέξσαις, οί πεξί το Θέιοι σοφοί, και τύτα Βιξάποιτες, Μάγοι μέν πεοσαγοξεύοιται. See alfo Plato apud Apul. Apol. p. 290, and Dio Chryfostomus, Orat. 36. F. 499.

and the profeffors of fcience, particularly phyfic and astrology*. They undertook to interpret dreams, to foretel future events, and to accomplish many wonderful things, by their fuperior knowledge of the fecret powers of nature, of the virtues of plants and minerals, and of the motions and influences of the stars. Dicdorus Siculus informs us, that " the priests " of Egypt foretold future events by aftrology, and " the infpection of facrifices t." And from the fame author we learn 1, " that the Egyptians observed " with great exactness, the motions, revolutions and " ftations of the planets, and their respective power " and operation in the generation of animals, and " the production of good and evil; that they fore-* tel very frequently future events ||; and that by long " obfervation they foreknow many things, which are " commonly thought to be beyond the reach of hu-" man knowlege." Cicero gives us the fame account

* Plin. Nat. Hift. 1. 30. c. 1.

† Διά της άς godoyias και της isgornorias, p. 66. D. ed. Rhodomani.

‡· Τάς τε τῶν πλαιήτων ἀ τέρων κινήσεις κỳ περιόδως κỳ τηρι[μές, ἔτι δὲ τὰς ἐκάτω δυνάμεις πρὸς τὰς τῶν ζώων γενέσεις, τίνων ἐισἰν ἀγαθῶν ἢ κακῶν απεργατικαὶ, Φιλοτιμότατα παρατετηρήκασι, κ.τ.λ. p. 73.

|| Particularly, fcarcity and plenty, epidemical difeafes, earthquakes, and comets, (which have been generally thought to portend fome extraordinary events) as well as the accidents of private life.

§ Principio Affyrii, trajectiones motulque stellarum observaverunt : quibus notatis, quid cuique significaretur, memoriæ prodiderunt.

Digitized by Google

174

count of these men, both amongst the Egyptians, and other ancient nations. To the former of whom, as the original difcoverers, Herodotus afcribes, " the * afcertaining the month and day which belonged to " each particular deity; and the foretelling the fu-" ture dispositions and fortunes of men, by observing " the day on which each perfon was born "." He alfo acquaint us +, " that when a prodigy happens, " they keep an account of the events which fucceed " it; and conclude that when a like prodigy appears, " the fame events will happen after it." In Cicero's first book of divination, in which the feveral kinds of it are explained and defended; it is refolved into many caufes very different from that of an immediate revelation from fome fpiritual being. He divides divination into artificial and natural. Under divination by art and observation, he comprehends that drawn from the infpection of the entrails of victims. the interpretation of prodigies and thunders, the use of prodiderunt. Chaldzi-diuturna obfervatione fiderum, fcientiam putantur effeciffe, ut prædici poffet, quid cuique eventurum, & quo quifque fato natus effet. Eandem artem etiam Ægyptii, &c. Cicero de Divinat. l. I. c. I. According to Diodorus Siculus, p. 73, the Chaldeans were a colony of Egyptians, who had been instructed in astrology by the priests of Egypt.

* Euterpe. c. 82.

† Γενομένου γας τέςατω, φυλάσσυσι γςαφόμενοι τῶ' ποδαϊνον και Ϋν κοτε ὕσεςον παςαπλήσιον τέτα γένηται, καλά τάϋτο νομίζυσι ἀποδήσεωθαι. Herodot. ubi fupra.

75

of aufpices, the practices of lots and aftrological predictions, and all the varieties of prefages and figns. In a word, as in almost every object they looked for fignifications of the divine purposes, and the prefages or indications of future events; fo in the right understanding of these external figns, confisted divination by art. By natural divination (which was internal) Cicero means, the forefight of future events by the mind under a particular emotion and agitation; as in dreaming, or when actuated by vaticinations or prophefyings by fury; and fuch oracles as proceeded from a divine instinct and afflatus *. It was thought, that divination by fury (or when the mind was in an extacy) might be excited by certain vapours or exhalations of the earth; and that a draught of water from a particular fpring would render perfons oracular and prophetical +. It was also afferted, that prodigies and figns

* Cicero de divinat. 1. 1. c. 2, 6, 18, 49, 55.

+ Of the waters which infeired the poets and prophets, mention is made by Statius Silv. I. II. 6. Et de Pieriis vocalem fontibus undam; by Anacreon, xiii, Adλor πióris, ödwe; by Tacitus, Haufta fontis arcani aqua,—edit refponfa; (Annals, l. 2. c. 54.) and by Pliny, l. 2. c. 103. l. 5. c. 29. Oracular exbalations are fpoken of in Cicero, de Div. l. 1. c. 50, Credo etiam anhelitus quoidam fuiffe terrarum, quibus inflatæ mentes oracula funderent. The ftrange agitations into which the goats of Coretas, and afterwards Coretas himfelf fell, upon their approaching the top of a cavern on the hill of Parnaffus, and receiving the influence of the fubterranean blaft; gave occafion to the building the temple, and eftablifning the famous oracle at Delphi. It was fuppofed, that " that virtue of the earth, " which agitates the mind of the prieftefs of Apollo with a di-" vine

" vine afflatus, may in length of time vanish." Potest vis illa terræ, quæ mentem Pythiæ divino afflatu concitabat. evanuiffe vetustate, ut quosdam exaruisse amnes, aut in alium cursum contortos & deflexos videmus. c. 10. Strabo likewife speaking concerning the Delphic Oracle, fays, there isfued out of a cavity misua industriainon, an enthusiastic gale, or wind, rendering perfons prophetical. But this matter is treated at large in Plutarch de defectu Oraculorum, where he allows indeed that demons might be appointed by the gods to prefide over divination and oracles. (p. 418. D. & p. 436. F.) and to be the guardians of the temperature of those exhalations, to which they are afcribed; but at the fame time it is afferted, that the foul is naturally endued with the faculty of divining, and that certain exhalations of the earth were the means of exciting that prophetic power or virtue. This prophetical blaft or (pirit of divination (for it is called martinor perma x) areima, p. 432.) was thought to owe its virtue to the fun or Apollo, (for they were both efteemed to be the fame god, p. 433. D. p. 434. F.) When the infpiration was too ftrong, the prophetefs was faid to be poffeffed with a dumb and evil (pirit, p. 438. B. vide p. 431-438. From Ammianus Marcellinus we learn, that divination was afcribed to the " fpirit of all the elements, and " to the fubftantial powers, which were appealed by different " rites, and over which the goddefs Themis was faid to pre-" fide." Elementorum omnium fpiritus, utpote perennium corporum præsentiendi (al. præsentienti) motu femper & ubique vigens, ex his que per disciplinas varias affectamus, participat nobifcum munera divinandi : & substantiales potestates ritu diverso placatæ, velut ex perpetuis fontium venis vaticina mortalitati suppeditant verba, quibus numen præesse dicitur Themidis: quam ex eo, quod fixa fatali lege decreta præscire facit in posterum, que reservira sermo Græcus appellat, ita cognominatam, in cubili folioque Jovis vigoris vivifici theologi ven teres collocarunt. Auguria & auspicia non volucrum arbitrio futura nescientium colliguntur: (nec enim hoc vel infipiens quisquam dicet) sed volatus avium dirigit Deus, ut rostrum sonans, aut prætervolans pinna turbido meatu vel leni futura præ-M monstret.

Ī

n

n

s

figns might be procured by difcipline *. So that divination was a fcience, in which they thought themfelves fure of fuccess, if they proceeded according to certain established rules.

We are not, however, from hence to infer, as fome have done, that the ancient magicians or priefts were mere naturalifts and aftrologers. There have indeed been Atheifts and Chriftians, who have been much addicted to divination and aftrology +; but thefe arts amongst the Pagan nations were founded in their fyftem of theology. Great things, it was thought, might be produced in nature; but not for that reason without the gods: for they had deified all the parts and powers of nature ‡, and more especially the heavenly bodies:

monfiret.—Extis item pecudum attenti fatidicis, in fpecies converti fuetis innumeras, accidentia fciunt.—Aperiunt tunc quoque ventura, cum æftuant hominum corda, fed loquuntur divina. Sol enim (ut aiunt Phyfici) mens mundi, noftras mentes ex fefe velut fcintillas diffunditans, cum eas incenderit vehementius, futuri confcias reddit. Unde Sibyllæ crebro fe dicunt ardere, torrente vi magna flammarum. Ammianus Marcellinus, l. 1. c. 1. p. 204, 205. ed. Gronov.

* Cumque magna vis videretur effe—in monstris procurandis in haruspicum disciplina, Cicero de div. 1. 1. c. 2. See Liv. 1. 22. c. 44, cited below, ch. 3. sect. 4. article 1.

+ Le Clerc de L'Incredulité, ch. 1. p. 32. and Mr. Bayle fur une comete.

t See the beginning of the preceding fection. Lord Bolingbroke reprefents infpiration, according to the Pagan idea of it, merely as a natural phenomenon, and as grounded on a phyfical principle, the intoxicating wind or vapour explained above:

178

bodies; afcribing to the latter not only life and intelligence, but a fore-perceiving motion*, and a fovereign influence on every thing here below. This notion lay at the foundation of divination by art. With regard to natural divination, as by fury, for inftance, excited by certain exhalations; this was founded on a fuppolition of the divinity of the earth, out of which those exhalations are generated, and of the fun, (called the mind of the world) to which they owe their virtue +. The human foul itself (which was thought to be " a particle of the divine air or fpirit, to be taken out from God t," and to have existed from eternity,) was believed to have a prefaging faculty, which exerted itself under feveral favourable circum-M 2 stances.

1

above : whereas from the passage in Cicero's first book of Divination, c. 19, cited above, p. 176. note p. it appears, that that very vapour was confidered as a divine afflatus. See his philofophical works, V. I. Effay I. It must be acknowleged, however, that Lord Bolingbroke was in this infonce milled by men more learned than himfelf, who have confidered that as natural magic, (according to the modern acceptation of it) in which demons were not thought to be concerned; without reflecting, that what we now call inanimate nature, was regarded by the ancient Heathens as animated and divine.

* Perennium corporum præsentiendi (al. præsentienti) mo-Ammianus Marcellinus, cited above, p. 177. tu, &c.

+ Plutarch de defectu orac. p. 436, E. See allo above, p. 176. note +, and note * below, p. 181.

‡ Ex ipfo Deo decerptus, ex universa mente delibatus. Cicero's Tufc. Quæft. v. & de Senectut.

180

ftances*. As from the imagined existence of these gods, they concluded there must be divination; fo from the apprehended reality of divination, they confirmed themselves in the belief of the existence of the gods +. Hence Maimonides reproaches every magician as an idolater t; and Pliny afcribes all the fplendor of magic to religion ||. The Heathens had other gods, befides the objects of nature, viz. demons, or deified human spirits; and from their subordinate ministry and mediation, and that of wicked spirits; divination, prophecy, and magic, were thought to proceed 6. The affiftance or influence of the gods was obtained by a great variety of rites and facrifices, adapted to their respective natures ¶; by the use of charms and fuperfitious words **, by ceremonies and fupplications.

* Cicero de Divinat. l. 1. c. 5, 31, 49, 51, 59.

† Si divinatio fit, dii fint; & fi dii fint, fit divinatio. Cicero de Nat. Deor.

‡ Mor. Nevoch. p. 445. Omnis magus citra dubium est Idololatra.

Nat. Hift. l. 30. c. 12.

§ Herodot. 1. 2. c. 83. Plato in fympof. in Epinomide, in Phædro; Potphyr. apud Eufeb. præp. Ev. 1. 4, 5, 6, & de Abstinentia, 1. 2. Jamblich. de Myst. Apul. Apol. Id. de deo Socrat. Plutarch de defect. Orac. cited above p. 176. n. †. & Pythagoras apud Diogen. Laert. in vita Pythag. n. 32. p. 514.

¶ Ritu diverso placatæ. Ammianus Marcellinus, l. 21. init.

** The famous Ephefian Letters, which were certain barbarous words ufed as charms, may be feen in Hefychius, or in Dr. Sykes' fupplications. Sometimes we find the power of inchanting afcribed to noxious herbs and drugs *, but not exclusively of the affistance of the gods, who were invoked to give them efficacy †. The magicians pretended in the proper use of their art, (for it was taught as fuch) to a power of compelling ‡ the gods to execute their defires and commands.

Upon the principles here explained, all the pretences amongst the Pagans to divination and forcery (and every other || fpecies of magic) were founded; whe-M 3 ther

Syke's Inquiry, p. 61. See his Further Inquiry, p. 66. Ovid fays, > Carmina fànguinea deducunt cornua lunæ Et revocant niveos folis euntis equos.

* Thus the witch in Virgil, Ecl. 8. fays, Has herbas, atque hæc Ponto mihi lecta venena Ipfe dedit Mæris; nafcuntur plurima Ponto. His ego fæpe lupum fieri, & fe condere fylvis Mærin, fæpe animas imis excire fepulchris, Atque fatas alio vidi traducere meffes.

† Theocritus Id. 2. They likewife thought, Quamvis plantam fuam habere stellam, quemadmodum & omnibus animalibus & metallis cetta sydera adscribunt. Maimon. Mor. Nevoc. 1. 3. c, 37.

‡ They acted cæca coactorum numinum violentia. Enchantreffes boafted that they had power over the gods. Lucan 1.6. v. 606, 742. Ovid. Metamor. 1. 7. 192.

|| I have taken no notice of that fpecies of magic, called *the*urgy ( $\Im_{urgy}(\alpha)$ ) because it principally confisted in a fanatical pretence to communion with demons, and a vision of their effence. So far as it was thought, to invest those who practifed

it,

£82

ther thole pretences were carried on by the prieft, under the protection, and for the fervice of the ftate *; or for the purpoles of private gain, by the loweft orders of magicians +, conjurers and witches, generally (though feldom effectually) proferibed or prohibited by law ‡. Whatever difference there might be between them, the Scripture brands them all as fhamelefs impoftors; and reproaches them with an utter inability of difcovering or accomplifhing any thing fupernatural. The prophet Ifaiah having foretold the deftruction of Babylon, fo famous all over the

it, with the power of the gods; it differed in one respect from that fort of magic called forcery ( $\gamma on \tau \epsilon \alpha_i$ ;) theurgy invoking only the benevolent divinities; forcery the mischievous ones, whose operations were fuitable to their nature.

* That the public ministers of religion practifed forcery as well as divination, is certain from their curfing the enemies of the state, and devoting them to destruction.

+ They were rather more extravagant, as well as more mifchievous, than the eftablished priests; inasmuch as they pretended to know other people's fortunes, to discover what was lost, to bewitch, to procure love, to walk upon the water, to fly through the air, to raise or lay storms, to turn themselves or others into any shapes, to remove corn from one field into another, to draw down the moon, to raise ghosts, to shop the course of rivers, and to kill or cure both men and cattle, &c. See Ovid's Metamor. 1. 7. v. 199.

‡ Concerning conjurers and fortune-tellers, who were called mathematici, Tacitus fays, they are a fallacious fort of men, quod in civitate noftra & vetabitur femper, & retinebitur. Hift. 1. 1. c. 22.

the world for divination and aftrology; thus proceeds to infult that proud city *: " Stand now with " thine inchantments, and with the multitude of thy " forceries, wherein thou hast laboured from thy " youth; if fo be thou shalt be able to profit, if fo " be thou mayest prevail. Thou art wearied in the " multitude of thy councils: let now the aftrologers, " the ftar-gazers, the monthly prognosticators, ftand " up, and fave thee from those things which shall " come upon thee," from that destruction, which, he tells them, with their various methods of divination and forcery, they would be unable either to forefee or prevent. The fame prophet thus warns the Ifraelites against having recourse to the Heathen diviners for instruction; "Should not a people feek unto their god?" Whom then fhould you confult but the God of Ifrael? " For the living to the dead +?" that is, Is it not abfurd to confult the dead concerning the ftate of the living, of which the former are ignorant? Or the meaning may be, Instead of the living God, will you have recourfe to the dead? The Heathen gods were dead men : and the oracles were placed in their temples, which were their fepulchres. Moreover, the Heathen diviners pretended to call up the fouls of the departed, which were fuppofed to posses a prophetic virtue; nay, by an inspection of the entrails of boys who had fuffered a violent death,

M 4

* Ifaiah xlvii. 11-13.

† Isaiah viii. 18, 19.

they

they hoped to dive into futurity*. The language of Isaiah implies, that it was unpardonable stupidity, in any or all these ways, to expect any instruction or information from the dead. When Jeremiah thus warns the Jews, " Learn not the way of the Hea-" then, and be not afraid of the figns of heaven," whole appearances were thought to portend particular calamities; he pronounces " the customs of the Heathens vain," on account of the utter ignorance and impotence of their gods +, who could not be fupposed to convey to others, that knowledge and power which they did not poffes themselves. And thus Jeremiah defcribes the prophets who were not. fent of God, " They prophefy unto you a falle vision " and divination, and a thing of nought, and the " deceit of their heart 1." On other occasions, he addreffes the people of God in the following strain: " Hearken not ye to your prophets, nor to your di-" viners, nor to your dreamers, nor to your enchan-" ters, nor to your forcerers. For they prophefy a " lie unto you "." The facred writers do at all times brand those, who exercised the arts of divination and forcery, as liars §; and the arts themfelves as lying vanities.

* To these methods of divination Justin Martyr refers, Apol. 1, p. 27. ed. Thirlb. Νευνομαντείαι μεν γάς, κ) αι άδιαφθόςων παίδων έποπτεύσεις, κ) ψυχών άνθρωπίτων κλήσεις.

+ Jerem. x. 2, 3-8, 14. Compare If. xli. 23, 24.

‡ Jer. xiv. 14.

|| Ch. xxvii. 9, 10.

§ Ifaiah xliv. 25. Jerem. 1. 36.

184

vanities *, the most abfurd and groundless delutions imaginable. What ftronger language could they have used, supposing them to have believed (as they certainly did believe) all the magic of the ancients to have had no other support, than human artifice and falsehood ?

Notwithstanding this clear decision of the point by the divine oracles, many Christians have contended for the fupernatural power and efficacy of Pagan divination and forcery. This point was maintained by the Fathers in particular, who afcribed the efficacy of magic to evil demons; as fome of the Heathen philosophers also did'+. It was a very prevailing opinion in the primitive church ‡, that magicians and necromancers, both amongst the Gentiles and heretical Christians, had each their particular demons, perpetually attending on their perfons, and obfequious to their commands, by whole help they could call up the fouls of the dead, foretel future events, and perform miracles. " In the cafe of idolatry, " they imagined demons to affume the names, and to * Plalm xxxi. 6. Jonah ii. 8.

+ Eufebius's Præp. Ev. 1. 5. c. 4, has this infeription, Περ τῶ πονηρῶν δαιμώνων εἶναι, τὰ παρὰ τοῦς ἔθνισι μαντεῖα τε καὶ χρηςήρια. And St. Auftin (de civ. Dei, l. 8. c. 16.) fays, Inter cætera etiam dicit [Apuleius] ad eos [dæmones] pertinere divinationes augurum, aruſpicum, vatum, atque fomniorum. Vid. Minuc. Fel. p. 30. ed. Lugd. Bat. and fee above, p. 180. note §. Porphyry de Abſtin. l. 2. § 41. p. 85, fays, διὰ μέντοι τῶν ἐναλίων κỳ ἡ πῶσα γουτένα ἰατιλιται.

1 See Dr. Middleton's Free Inquiry, p. 66.

186

" to act the parts of the Heathen gods; and in ma-" gic to affume the forms of departed fouls, and to " appear under the names of thofe, who were called " up from the dead; and as fuch, to anfwer all quef-" tions, which fhould be demanded of them "." As what was urged above + againft the former fuppofition, concludes with equal force againft the latter; I need not fhew, how inconfiftent this is with the Scripture account of the magicians, as utterly unable to fupport their pretenfions, by any works or predictions beyond human power and fkill. It will be neceffary however to examine what is alledged, in fupport of the contrary doctrine.

1. It is alleged, " that the names by which the " feveral forts of diviners are defcribed in Scripture, " imply a communication with fpiritual beings." Thofe who urge this argument, do not always diftinguish between the Scriptures in their original languages, and in the translation now in use, which (like most other translations, whether ancient or modern) was made by perfors deeply tinctured with the vulgar superstition, and often on that account does great injustice to the original. That phrase t, a familiar familiar fpirit, or familiar fpirits, which occurs fo often, is thought to be an inftance of this kind. But even fuppofing the original word to be rightly tranflated; it cannot be inferred from hence, that the facred writers believed, that any perfons were really affifted and infpired by a familiar fpirit. They could not allow, and meant only to characterize, their pretensions. The Scripture, as it defcribes the Heathen deities by their usual appellations, (gods, lords, demons,) diftended as a bottle, and is applied particularly to those perfons who delivered oracles as from their bellies, fwelled, as it was believed, by fome divine afflatus. Accordingly, it is generally translated by the LXX. if yas given by; a word which fignifies those who speak with their mouths shut, fo as to seem to speak out of their bellies. But though the word, according to its strictess etymology, might denote only a bottle-bellied perfon; yet as it is the word used to defcribe those, who pretended that their bellies were inflated by a divine energy, by the perfons who believed the reality of those prentences; our translators are not, perhaps, wholly to be condemned, for the manner in which they render it. (See below, ch. 4. fect. 2.)

‡ This phrafe (which occurs Lev. xix. 31. chap. xx. 6, 7. Deut. xviii. 11. 1 Sam. xxviii. 3, 7, 8, 9. 2 Kings xxi. 6. ch. xxiii. 24. 1 Chron. x. 13. 2 Chr. xxxiii. 6. If. xxix. 4. ch. viii. 19.) has nothing in the original to anfwer to it but ob (or obotb in the plural number) which fignifies a bottle, (which among the ancients fomewhat refembled our bladders,) Job xxxix. 19; and hence came to denote a perfon whofe belly is diffended

* Id. p. 70. + Page 240.

But it is not fo eafy to excufe them, for the manner in which they have acquitted themfelves on another occafion. I refer to their reprefenting Simon, the magician, as bewitching the Samaritans; and hereby giving a fenfe to the word, isisar, Acts viii. 9, different from what they themfelves have put upon isisaro, in the 13th verfe: which they juftly render, be wondered. Simon had been exercifing the magical arts in Samaria, and thereby raifing the afloni/hment of the inhabitants. But the fight of genuine miracles difcovered at once the vanity of the most artful imitations of them, and afloni/hed and convinced Simon himfelf, who had fo long raifed the afloni/hment of others. Vid. Schmidium ad Act. viii. 13.

187

mons,) which are expressive, not of what they really were in themselves, but of what their votaries believed them to be *; fo it calls all those perfons, who pretended to any intercourfe with the gods, by their common names, (prophets, magicians, necromancers, diviners, forcerers, monthly prognofticators, &c.) though these names were at first assumed by the pretenders themfelves, to enable them more fuccefsfully to carry on their impostures; or conferred on them by the fuperstition of the people. Whatever pretenfions or claims these names may imply, it is fufficient that the Scriptures deny them any answerable powers or performances. And therefore when St. Luke fpeaks of the damfel at Philippi as " poffeffed with a spirit of divination, or of Apollo +," he meant only to defcribe her pretenfions, and the common belief concerning her. Dr. Sykes was of opinion, that this woman had merely acquired a trick of fpeaking inwardly, as from her belly; by the discovery of which the was difabled from playing it any longer: while others

* See above, p. 172. In like manner Jeremiah calls partienlar celeftial appearances, "the figns of heaven," becaufe the Heathens regarded them as fuch, ch. x. 2. And who feruples to fay, fuch a perfon tells fortunes, when nothing more is meant, than that he pretends to do it?

+ Acts xvi. 16, 18. Πνώμα πύθωνος, a fpirit of Python or Apollo: this is manifeitly the language of the Pagans, which St. Luke adopted, because it ferved to describe the case of the darafel. He cannot be supposed to allow, that Apollo (whether the word here denotes a hero god, or the sun) imparted to her the power of prophessing.

others plead that fhe was really infpired. Both parties equally forget, that a fpirit of Python or Apollo, denoted in the language of antiquity, not only the infpiration of Apollo, but alfo that raving and madnefs, which were the effect of that fuppofed infpiration and poffeffion *. And therefore the miracle performed upon the damfel, or the caffing, out of her the fpirit of Apollo, confifted in curing her madnefs, and reftoring her to her right mind; in confequence of which the people would confider her no longer as infpired or poffeffed.

2. The laws of Mofes  $\dagger$  against divination and witchcraft are thought to prove the efficacy of these arts; though those laws do really prove nothing more than their execrable wickedness and impiety. By the credit of these arts, the people were drawn away from the true God to false ones. The arts themselves were founded upon the principles of idolatry  $\ddagger$ ; and the

* No prophetels was thought to be infpired, but when the was mad and raving. Η τε γὰς δη ἐν Δελφεῶς πχοφῆτις, αἴ τ ἐν Δεδάm ἰδρειαι, μαινῶσαι, κ. τ. λ. Platon. Phædr. p. 1220, C. D. E. ἐδἐις γὰς ἔντις ἐφαπτέται μαντικῆς ἐνέια κζ.ἀληθές. Id. Tim. p. 1074-D. It appears from Meric Cafaubon, (cited by Dr. Macknight, Harmony, v. 1. p. 179, 2d ed.) that to the natural difeafes of melancholy, madnefs, epilepfy, &c. enthuliaftic divinatory fits are (thought to be) incidental: and that when the difeafe is cured, the enthuliafms go away.

+ Exod. xxii. 18. Lev. xix. 26, 31. ch. xx. 27. Deut. xviii. 10, 11. Would it not be in vain to make laws against those, whose miraculous power could prevent their execution?

‡ This was proved above concerning divination, p. 178. Witchcraft alfo, and all magical rites, had a reference to the heavenly the rites and placatory facrifices which attended them, were in their very nature acts of idolatry, that is, of high treafon against the Jewish state, over which Jehovah prefided as supreme Governor. It was necelfary therefore that every magician should be put to death, becaufe every magician was an idolater. I add, that many of the rites of magic were flagrant immoralities. For those who anciently practifed witchcraft, mingled dangerous drugs with their compositions, and, on account of the real mifchief they hereby did, are often ranked with poifoners*. Amongst other deteftable methods of divination, one was the murther of infants and others, who were facrificed on purpofe, that by raking into their entrails, they might gain an infight into futurity; as appears from the testimony of Herodotus, Cicero, Lucan, Juvenal, Tacitus, Philostratus, Porphyry+, and many other learned heavenly bodies. Nullum autem magicum opus fine fiderum refpectu & confideratione poteft perfici. Maimon. Mor. Nevoc. pt. 3. c. 37. He farther obferves, that the belief of their power to hurt or help, neceffarily led mankind to worfhip them. Accordingly both witchcraft and divination are joined with idolatry, I Sam. xv. 22, 23. If. ii.,6-8. ch. xlvii. 12, 13. Jerem. xxvii. 9, 10. Ezek. xxi. 21, 22. Nahum iii. 4. Micah v. 12.

\* The Hebrew word, mecashephim, which we translate forcerers, the LXX render by  $\varphi_{aguaris}$ .

† Jacobus Geufius, in his book entitled, Victimæ humanæ, Pars I. c. 19–21, cites these and other Heathen writers, to shew how very frequently human facrifices were employed by those, who practifed divination and magic. The Cimbri ripped open ed Pagans; as well as from the intimations of the facred writers *. Sorcerers and forcerefles were fuppofed to perform all their amazing works by the affultance of the fouls of young boys, who had been violently put to death for that purpofe, and then called up from the dead, by ineffable adjurations +. Now might it not be very fit, feverely to punish these external acts of forcery ‡, without entering into the queftion open the bowels, and from them formed a judgment of future events. Strabo, 1. 7. p. 451. (compare Porphyry de Abst. 1. 2. § 51.) The Celtæ divined by the agonies and convulsions of the men, who were offered for a facrifice, and from the effufion of their blood, Diodor. Sic. 1. 5. p. 308.

* Deut. xviii. 10, 11, 2 Kings xvii. 17. chap. xxi. 6. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6. Ezek. xx. 26, 31.

† In Horace's epodes, 1. 5. epod. 5. v. 12, 13, the perfon murdered by the forcerefs, Canidia, is puer, impube corpus. The author of that very ancient, though fpurious work, the "Recognitions of St. Clemens," reprefents Simon Magus as faying, Pueri incorrupti, & violenter necati, animam adjuramentis ineffabilibus evocatam adfiftere mihi feci; & per ipfam fit omne quod jubeo. Ed. Cotelerii, p. 523. See Eufeb. Hift. Ecclef. 1. 7. c. 10. Chryfoftom and others, cited by Cotelerius in his note on this paffage of Clemens. This kind of divination was called βεφομαντέκα. On fuch rites of magic, fee Broukhufius on Tibullus, 1. 11. 45. and Fabricius, Bibl. Antiq. p. 417; 419.

‡ This is not a groundlefs diffinction; for the laws of Mofes are levelled wholly against the external aEls of forcery, as appears from all the laws referred to above, p. 189. note †, and particularly from Deut. xviii. 10, 11, 14, "There shall not be "found amongst you any one that maketh his fon or his daugh-"ter

queftion, whether they were or were not of any efficacy to procure fupernatural affiftance?

3. Pretensions to divination (it is farther pleaded) could not have fupported "their credit in all the "Heathen nations, and through all ages;" if fome instances of true divination had not happened, however rare we may suppose them to have been. This last argument (which was considered in a former chapter *) proceeds on a supposition notoriously false: for diviners of all forts, observers of times, inchanters, witches, wizzards, ventriloquists, and necromancers, did not support their credit in the manner here alledged,

" ter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an " observer of the times, or an enchanter, or a witch, &c." Amongst those who believed the supernatural power of forcery, laws were framed against its supposed effects. The Roman law forbad bewitching the fruits of the earth, and drawing their neighbours corn in their own fields by charms. Apud nos in duodecim tabulis cavetur, ne quis alienos fructus excan-Seneca, Nat. Quæst. 1. 4. c. 7. Seneca adds, " our taffit. " ignorant anceftors imagined, that flowers could be procur-" ed or driven away by charms; but we need not go to any " fchool of philosophy to teach us otherwife." As the Romans became more enlightened, the ftyle of their law was al-The Lex Cornelia, ufually cited as a law against fortered. cery, forbids poisoning, & mala facrificia, Liv. Decad. 1. 1. 8. which may ferve both to explain and vindicate the laws of Mofes for the punifiments denounced against the fame crimes; and to shew how unreasonably this divine legislator has been seproached, on account of these laws, with a spirit of perfecution.

Digitized by Google

* Chap. 2. fect. 2.

193

alleged, and never were in any reputation with Pagans of a liberal mind and education. And from Chriftians, whofe zeal for the credit of ancient magic thus transports them beyond the bounds of truth, we appeal to Heathens of understanding and virtue, in vindication of the cenfure paffed upon every species of magic by the prophets of God. Cicero, the greatest mafter of reason and learning amongst the Romans, and in all respects a very able judge of this subject, condemns the oracles of the Heathen gods as either false, or obscure, or ambiguous, (fo as to require other oracles to explain them) or as true only by chance or accident *. We find both Sophocles and Euripides, upon the public theatre at Athens, (a city greatly addicted to fuperfition and idolatry,) passing a fimilar cenfure upon the Pagan foothfayers and diviners +, or reprefenting them as men actuated only by the love 'N of

Ċ

j,

1

* Partim fallis, ut ego opinor; partim calu veris, ut fit in omni oratione fæpiflime; partim flexiloquis & obscuris, ut interpres egeat interprete, et fors ipsa ad fortes referenda fit; partim ambiguis. De Divinat. 1. 2. c. 56. In the 25th chapter, he argues against divination by art, in the whole extent of it, from the observity of the figns. It appears likewise from Cicero in the fame book, (as also from Strabo, 1. 15.) that aftrology was rejected by astronomens, and the best philofophers.

† — Τις ζ μάντις is' άνλε; Ος όλλγ άληθῆ, πολλά ζ ψιῦδη λέγκι Τυχάν ὅταν ζ μὴ τύχη, διοίχεται.

In Aulide, v. 956.

of money *. Pindar in his Olympic odes +, which were all composed to be fung on the most public occafions, and probably at the folemn facrifices offered to the gods, affirms, " that they have bestowed upon " mortals no fure prefage of things to come." And in still earlier times, Hefiod t had maintained the fame opinion. What various rites of fuperstition were practifed by fuch Heathens as were loft to all reflection, whereby they gueffed what should happen to them; we learn from Theophrastus in his characters of fuperflition, and from Plutarch in his book on the fame fubject #: but we find them derided by Terence in his Phormio 6. Nor were there any men of underflanding, who gave countenance to any of the modes of divination, unless from a principle of compliance with vulgar prejudices, or for reafons of state ¶. Amongst the Heathens no imposture was censured as unlawful,

* Το μαντικον γde πῶν φιλάεγυεον γένω. Sophocles Antigone, 1607. Vide etiam Oed. Tyr. 395. et Euripid. Iphig. in Aul. 520.

† Ode xii. 1. 10.

194

1 Mártis & idés isiv inzboslav árbeunar Osis är édén Zarós róor aigiázoio.

Hefiod. Fragment.

1 See also Maimonides de Idolatria, c. 11. § 4, 5, 6.

§ A&. 4. fc. 4.

¶ Exiftimo jus augurum, etfi divinationis opinione principio conftitutum fit, tamen postea reipublicæ causa confervatum ac retentum. Cicero de Divinat. l. 2. c. 35. see also c. 33. From unlawful, which was judged to be useful \*. With regard to forcery; the pretended effects of it, as they are deferibed by the Heathen poets +, are too extravagant to be confuted, and their beft writers treat the art itfelf with derifion. In proof of this, I appeal to Horace  $\ddagger$ , Cicero  $\parallel$ , Seneca  $\S$ , Dion Caffius  $\P$ , Quintus Curtius \*\*, Tacitus ++, and Pliny  $\ddagger$ , befides others already taken notice of; and indeed to all the Heathens, whofe understandings were not totally depraved by fuperstition. The miracles faid to be wrought amongst the Pagans, were not believed by the histo-N 2 rians

195

From the fame political motives, the wifest Heathens countenanced the popular idolatry. See August. de Civitat. Dei, 1. 4. c. 3, 22, 27, 31.

* Plutarch. 1. de Socrat. Genio, p. 579, 580.

† Ovid. Met. 1. 7. fab. 2. 1. 199, &c. Virgil. Eclog. 8.
En. 4. Lucan. 1. de bello civili, 6. Manil. 1. 1. Tibullus,
1. 1. Eleg. 2. See above, p. 182. note †.

‡ Epift. 1. 2. ep. 2. 1. 208.

A

d

K

ſ,

4

ı;

ĺ.

12 10

ŀ

ĥ

|| De Nat. Deor. 1. 1. Cum poetarum autem errore conjungere licet portenta magorum, Ægyptiorumque in codem genere dementiam. And in his fecond book of divination, where he delivers his own fentiments, he fays in reference to magical operations, Num igitur me cogis etiam fabulis credere? &cc.

Digitized by Google

§ Nat. Quzit. 1. 4. c. 67.

¶ L. 52. p. 490.

** L. 7. c. 4.

++ L. I. C. 22.

11 Nat. Hift. 1. 30. c. 1, 2, 3. 1. 26. c. 4.

196

rians * who relate them; and the philosophers treated them as fables +. If magic was able to support fome reputation in ages of gross ignorance, through the fuperior knowlege and fraudulent contrivances of those who exercised it; yet when learning revived and became general, it never failed to fink into contempt. It did fo in the fame age, in which the Gofpel gained a general establishment by the credit of undeniable miracles. In vain did the Roman emporor, Nero, by difcovering the most extravagant fondness for magic, and fending for the most eminent professors of it from every quarter of the world, endeavour to fupport its finking reputation. Pliny informs us, that all that Nero gained by his attempts, was an entire convíction of the folly of magic. And he observes himfelf, that if at any time magicians perform extraordinary things, it is owing to the efficacy of their drugs, not of their magic art ‡. Now, inalmuch

* Quz ante conditam, condendamve urbem, poeticis magis decora fabulis, quam incorruptis rerum gestarum monumentis traduntur, ea nec affirmare nec refellere in animo est. Datur hæc venia antiquitati, ut miscendi humana divinis, primordia urbium augustiora faciat. Liv. Proem. After reciting several prodigies, Livy adds, Et alia ludibria oculorum, auriumque, credita pro veris. L. 22. c. 44. See Liv. l. 24. c. 10. l. 22. c. 3. et Quintus Curtius, l. 9. c. 1.

† In reference to Heathen miraclés, Cicero fays, l. 2. de Divinat. Nihil debet effe in philosophia commentitiis fabellis loci. Concerning Cato, he tells us in the fame book, Mirari fe aiebet, quod non rideret aruspex, aruspicem cum vidifiet.

1 In his Veneficas artes pollere, non magicas, Nat. Hill. 1. 30. c. 2.

as magic did conftantly lofe its credit, just in the degree in which men exercised their understandings, it certainly was not supported by any supernatural power.

SECT. IV.

Concerning the falle prophets as spoken of in Scripture, in which the following passages are explained, Deut. xiii. 1—5. Matt. xxiv. 24. 2 Theff. ii. 9. Rev. xiii. 13, 14; together with several others relative to the falle teachers in the apostolic age.

THAT the pretences to infpiration and miracles, made by falfe prophets, in fupport of error and idolatry, fhould be branded in Scripture as the fole effects of human craft and impofture; is what might be naturally expected from those writings, which do not allow the power of infpiring predictions, or of working miracles, to any Pagan deity, or to any evil spirit. For from what other quarter was it ever imagined, that a false prophet could receive any supernatural support? It will be necessary, however, to examine the several passages of Scripture, which speak to this point; inassuch as they have had a fense affigned them, absolutely inconfistent with the principles already established.

I.

I fhall begin with confidering that celebrated warning of Moles to the Ifraelites : " If there arife among N 3 " you

Digitized by Google

" you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth " thee a fign or a wonder, and the fign or the won-" der come to pafs, whereof he fpake unto thee, fay-" ing, Let us go after other gods, (which thou haft " not known,) and let us ferve them; thou fhalt not " hearken unto his words:—for the Lord your God " proveth you, to know whether you love the Lord " your God with all your heart.—And that prophet, " and that dreamer of dreams, fhall be put to death, " becaufe he hath fpoken to turn you away from the " Lord your God, which brought thee out of the set and of Egypt, and redeemed you out of the houfe " of bondage *."

It has been contended that Mofes, in this paffage, is laying down this general rule, viz. " that the true " divinity of miracles is to be determined by the doc-" trines, which they are applied to confirm." It is farther afferted, that the Jews are here required, to make bis law, in particular, the ftandard by which to judge of miracles; to difallow the force and evidence of those which oppose that law; and even to put to death the prophet who performed them, because he taught the worship of a strange god +. The learned Dr. Benson ‡ and Dr. Lardner #, as well as many * Deut. xiii. 1-5.

+ Hence Rouffeau concluded, that the Pagans had an equal right to put the apoffles to death, for preaching up to them the worfhip of a firange god, though they proved their miffion by miracles.

‡ Life of Christ, p. 202.

|| Jewish and Heathen Testimonies, V. 1. p. 255, 256. Though many others, were of opinion, that Mofes here puts a cafe, which never would happen; but if it did happen, and a miracle was performed to induce the Ifraelites to worship other gods, it was to be difregarded. Here it is natural to enquire, whether any prophet did ever arife amongst the Israelites, who performed real miracles to draw them into idolatry. If no fuch prophet did arife, (and there is not the least reason to believe there did;) how needless was it to caution the Ifraelites against him? Nay, Mofes knew that it was impossible any fuch prophet should arife; becaufe he appropriates all miracles to God *, and denies that the Heathen deities could support their claims by any fupernatural works. He always reprefents them as fenfeless idols, and could not therefore allow them any power or dominion over mankind. On all occasions he appeals to miracles, as absolute proofs of the divinity of Jehovah, and of his own mission *: and can he, without gross felf contradiction, here reprefent these works as common both to the true God and to rival deities; to a divine meffenger and a falle prophet? And indeed why fhould N 4

Though this judicious, candid and excellent writer afferts, that Mofes here refers to miracles; yet, contrary to his ufual method, he produces no proof of his affertion. Nay, he allows it to be a rule of Scripture, that if any man propoles, and performs a miracle in proof of his miffion, it would be decifive in his favour; and yet in the cafe ftated above, he fuppofes that a miracle determines nothing.

* This will be shewn below, ch. 3. sect. 5. and ch. 4. sect. 1.

fhould not a real miracle equally gain credit to both or neither? be of as great weight againft Mofes as for him? Mofes neither does, nor could allow, that an idolatrous prophet would perform works truly miraculous: and the very order to put fuch a prophet to death, fhews that there was no danger of his being protected from punifhment by a miraculous power.

The Jewish lawgiver here refers, not to true miracles, but to those divinations amongs the Pagans, by which the credit of idolatry was supported. Amongs other methods of divination, one was by the interpretation of portents, oftents, prodigies, monsters *, rare and extraordinary appearances and occurrences, which were falsely deemed supernatural, and thought to prefignify + future events. These are the figns and wonders ‡ here spoken of by Moses, and which it was the

* The feveral species of divination are enumerated in Cicero de Nat. Deor. 1. 2. c. 65. Multa cernunt haruspices; multa augures provident; multa oraculis declarantur; multa vaticinationibus; multa fomniis; multa portentis.

+ See the passage from Herodotus, cited above, p. 175, and note ‡, below.

t Heb. Oth, a fign, and mopheth, a wonder, like the correfpondent Greek words on the order of the applied to miraculous works, yet very commonly bear a different application. Oth denotes any mark or token, Gen. xvii. 11. Exod. xii. 13. Ezek. xx. 12, 20; and fo likewife does the word on the order of the order of the order of the order of the word on the order of the word on the order of the order of the order of the order of the word on the order of the paffages of the LXX. Oth and mopheth are both applied to fuch the bufinefs of the Pagan prophet (or interpreter of the will of the gods) and diviner by dreams to expound *. And that Mofes does not here refer to any miraculous works performed upon the fpot, but to a prodigy or fign of fome future event, is farther evident fuch things as point out, and prefignify future events, I Kings xiii. 3. If. viii. 18. ch. xx. 3. Ezek. xii. 6, 11. ch. xxiv. 24, 27; and fo are both on union and rigas, Luke xxi. 11, 25. Acts ii. 19. In Ælian's Var. Hift. 1. 12. c. 57. we are told, that when Alexander led his forces against Thebes, of us 9500 onμιζα αύτοις κ) τέρατα άπίσειχον, προσημαίνοντες τας περί αύτων όσον ουdina ruxas, " the gods fent figns und wonders amongst them, " prefignifying their impending fate." Polybius alfo (lib. 3. c. 10. p. 365. l. g. cited by Raphelius on Mat. xxiv. 24.) uses both these words together in the same sense as Ælian. See also the citation from Herodotus, fect. 3. p. 175. note +, where riens fignifies a prodigy. The following paffage from Livy, (1. 22. c. 44.) may ferve farther to explain the nature and use of prodigies. Consules duabus urbanis legionibus scriptis, supplementoque in alias lecto, priusquam ab urbe moverent, prodigia procurarunt, quæ nuntiata erant. Murus ac portæ tactæ, & Ariciz etiam Jovis ædes de cælo tacta fuerat. Et alia ludibria oculorum, auriumque, credita pro veris. The prophetic fign and portent was fometimes preternatural, Homer. 11. 2. 1. 308-324, but often nothing more than fome very rare and uncommon accidents and occurrences, Terent. Phormio Act. 4. fc. 4. 1. 24, 25, 26. Hence the Roman orator fays, (De Div. 1. 2.) Si quod raro fit, id portentum putandum est, sapientem esse portentum est, sepius enim mulum peperisse arbitror, quam sapientem fuisse.

* In Homer (II. 1. v. 62.) a prophet, and an expounder of dreams are reckoned amongst the persons, capable of explaining the meaning of Apollo in fending the plague amongst the Greeks. Compare Jerem. xxvii. 9.

Digitized by Google

202

dent from his speaking of the sign given, as a thing that might come to pass, or afterwards happen. To give a fign or a wonder, therefore, must mean, the proposing and appealing to any particular prodigy or portent, as a token or proof of a divine interpolition, as a declaration of the decrees of the gods, and an indication of futurity. It is indeed fuppofed, that the prodigy might poffibly be followed by the very event it was faid to prefage; neverthelefs Mofes did not, and could not admit, that this completion of the prediction was a proof of any fupernatural infpiration. For the Heathen gods, according to his reprefentation of them, were as unable to foretel, as they were to accomplifh, any thing. Predictions no lefs than miracles, are propofed in Scripture as figns of a prophet's miffion. When a prophet spoke in the name of the true God, and the event foretold did not come to pass; the Israelites were to conclude, that the prophet spoke entirely from himself *; it being impossible that Jehovah should either be deceived himfelf, or deceive his creatures. On the other hand, if his prediction (of fuch future events as human reafon could not foresee) received its accomplishment, they were to regard him as a prophet +. But a perfon who fpoke in the name of a falfe or idol god, was to be rejected, notwithstanding the accomplishment of his (conjectural) prediction; because the deity by whom he profeffed to be infpired, was a mere nullity, and * Deut. xviii. 18—22.

+ Jerem. xxviii. 9. If. xli. 23. ch. vii. 14.

and therefore could not infpire him with any fupernatural knowlege. The very fuppofition, that the Pagan prognofticator might, in a particular inftance, divine aright; implies, that this was not likely to be a common cafe, but that this predictive fign would more generally fail of its accomplifhment; and confequently was nothing more than human conjecture *.

To difcern the full meaning and propriety of this prophetic admonition, we must recollect both the temper, and the circumstances of the Ifraelites. They were continually exposed to the artifices of the numerous Heathen priests and diviners +; who in virtue of their fuperior skill in the laws of nature, were able to make very probable gueffes concerning fome events, which were thought to be beyond the reach of human forefight; and who, no doubt, by habit acquired a conjectural fagacity more than common; and who, at least, by the very frequency of their conjectures, could fcarcely be always t in the wrong. Whenever their predictions came to pass, they urged the accomplishment of their fign (fent, as they affirmed, by the gods) as a divine interpolition. То facts

* Against the divinity of figns and ostents, we find the Heathens objecting their obscurity, Quæ fi figna Deorum putanda funt, cur tam obscura fuerunt? Cicero de Div. 1. 2. c. 25. See above, p.-193.

+ 1 Kings xviii. 19. Jerem. xxvii. 9, 10.

‡ For as Cicero observes, (de Divinat. l. 2. c. 4.) Quis eff enim qui torum diem jaculans, non aliquando collimet ?

203

facts of this nature we know the Pagans were wont to appeal. But this was not the worst of the case. Those who are strongly addicted to superstition, eafily give credit to every thing that feems to favour it : they remember and regard a fingle oracle that proves true, while they overlook the more numerous inftances in which the oracles have failed. With regard to the Israelites, their whole history shews, that they had too little efteem and relifh of the chafte and pure worship of the true God, and were inflamed with the love of idolatry, on account of its licentious rites, and the indulgence it allowed to their lufts. This made them an eafy prey to the delusion of false prophets, and is the ground of the frequent warnings against them in Scripture. Moles here puts the cafe as ftrongly as poffible, when he tells them : " Suppose that a Pa-" gan prophet or diviner should propose fome pro-" digy or extraordinary appearance, as a proof of " the interpolition of a falle god, and an indication " of futurity; and that the event fhould correspond " to the prophecy; do not on this account hastily " conclude, that there is any thing fupernatural or " miraculous in the cafe; neither expect that the true " God fhould interpofe * in an extraordinary manner " at every turn, to prevent fuch occurrences as thefe; " which he will permit for the trial and difcovery of " your temper. If doubtful appearances and lucky " conjectures

* For fuch purpoles God might on fome great occasions interpole, "He frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad." Ifaiah xliv. 25. See Pfalm xxxi. 10.

204

" conjectures ferve you as reafons to defert his wor-"fhip; this will be a full proof of your being previ-"oufly difaffected to him. For ye know, how am-"ply he demonstrated his own divinity and fole dominion over nature †, (fo utterly fubverfive of all "the groundlefs claims of the Heathen gods,) and laid you under the most powerful and lasting obligations to his worship and fervice, by those ftupendous and undeniable miracles, which accomplished your deliverance from the bondage of "Egypt."

From this view of the passage, it appears, that Mofes does not make the fuppofition, of a prophet's working real miracles in the name of the Pagan deities; nor require the Ifraelites to difregard fuch works, on account of the abfurdity of the doctrine they are defigned to atteft. Nor the most distant intimation is given, that we are in any cafe to make a prophet's doctrine, the standard whereby to judge of the divinity of his miracles. He is here guarding the Ifraelites against the pretended divination and prodigies of the Pagans. And the reason he assigns, why they should not fuffer themselves to be feduced by prodigies and strange events, or by the accidental completion of a conjectural prediction, into the worship of falle gods, is, that the claims of Jehovah had been already established, and confequently theirs confuted, by miracles; the validity of his claims neceffarily inferring the falsehood of theirs. It is to miracles alone, alone, that Mofes here appeals; by this fingle proof he decides the question concerning the fole right of Tehovah, to the worfhip of the Ifraelites. And his reasoning is defigned to prove, that the fign or wonder of the prophet, who announced any other god, than the God of Ifrael, could not be really supernatural. In those early ages, when eclipses, meteors, earthquakes, inundations, and all the uncommon phenomena of nature, were represented by Pagan impostors or enthusiasts, as the productions of their fictitious deities; how could Mofes more effectually guard the Israelites against these frauds and delusions. than by reminding them, how fully Jehovah had afferted and vindicated his fole dominion over the whole natural world; and thus fhewing them, that the events in question were the effects of that order and difposition, which God had established at the beginning?

Digitized by Google

+ See below, ch. 3. fect. 5.

II.

We are in the next place to examine that warning of the Christian lawgiver to his disciples, "There "shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall "shew great figns and wonders, infomuch that (if it "were possible) they shall deceive the very elect *."

Here our Lord has (very erroneoufly, as I apprehend) been fuppofed to make his gofpel, (juft as Mofes in the foregoing paffages was fuppofed to make his law,) the criterion whereby to judge of the divinity

* Mat. xxiv. 24. Mark xiii. 22.

3.

nity of miracles; and to direct men to confider the like works as marks of imposture when wrought by others, which he had appealed to, when wrought by himself, as indubitable signs of a divine mission. But if miracles proved bim to be the Meffiah; must they not equally establish the claim of any other perfon to that character? Were it poffible, they fhould be wrought in confirmation of opposite claims; they would mutually deftroy each other. The wonders here fpoken of, are emphatically ftyled great; and the end proposed by them, was the deliverance of God's people; which, to a Jew at least, could not appear to be an end unworthy of a divine interpoli-And therefore, fuppofing the miracles to have tion. been really performed by falfe Chrifts and falfe prophets; the Jews must either have admitted their claims inforced by great miracles, or have rejected those of every other. At least, might it not have been expected, that our Lord, to prevent the deception of his followers, would have laid down fome fure and perfpicuous rule, to enable them to judge, in what cases great miracles are proofs of a divine agency, and when they are evidences only of a diabolical one? When a prophet has established his own miffion by miracles; is his barely foretelling those of his rivals and oppofers, a fufficient criterion whereby to judge of their author? Would it not rather be a confession, that miracles are no certain figns of a divine miffion?

But our Lord is not here warning his disciples against admitting the divinity of unquestionable miracles, but against hastily crediting the truth of those pretences pretences to miracles, which would be made by the perfons of whom he is fpeaking. This appears, as well from the natural import of this prophecy in its original language; as from the hiftory and character of the impoftors, to whom it refers. Chrift does not fay, "Falfe prophets fhall fhew \* (that is, really exhibit and perform) great figns;" but (as the original word fhould have been rendered) " they will GIVE †," that is, appeal to, promife or undertake to produce, fuch figns; ufing the very language of the Jewifh legiflator explained above, who reprefents a prophet as giving  $\ddagger$  (that is, propofing or appealing to)

* Had this been our Lord's meaning, he would have expressed it, as Josephus does in the passages cited below, (p. 210. note +. and p. 211. note +.) by the word deter.

+ This is the most natural sense of durues. Dr. Lardner, in a letter which is now before me, after taking notice, that although Whitby, Le Clerc, and other commentators allow, great things were done by the impostors, referred to by Christ in this prediction, yet that no miracles are afcribed to them by Josephus; adds, " I shall be obliged to Mr. Farmer, if he " will let me know his folution of this difficulty." In compliance with this request, I communicated to him my explication of the word dwrser, which I had never met with in any writer, and which intirely folves the particular difficulty proposed by Dr. Lardner, as well as removes the general objection against the authority of miracles, which unbelievers have hitherto raifed from this paffage. The doctor in his reply expreffes himself in the following terms : " Your answer is very " agreeable, and will be of use to me." Accordingly he inferted it in his Testimonies, V. I. p. 67.

1 Deut. xiii. 1. in the Septuagint.

to) a fign or wonder, whether it did or did not come to pafs. The phrafe itfelf does not determine, whether the fign given, be it the promife of a miracle, or the prediction of an event, would be confirmed or confuted, when it was expected to be accomplifhed. It might be engaged for, and yet never be exhibited. And every circumftance of the prophecy contained in this context, ferves to prove, that the perfons here foretold would only undertake to fhew great figns, without performing what they undertook. But I shall argue chiefly from the history of those perfons, in whose appearance and pretensions this prophecy received its completion, and which must be allowed to be the best key to the interpretation of this prophetic warning.

Our Saviour here refers to those impostors, who fprung up in Judea in the interval between the delivery of this prophecy, and the destruction of Jerufalem. As early as the 45th or 46th year of the Christian æra, one Theudas, who called himself a prophet, perfuaded great numbers to follow him to Jordan, by telling them that he would, by his own command, divide the river : but this confident boaft ended in his own destruction, as well as that of many of his followers *. About nine or ten years afterwards, Judea fwarmed with thefe deceivers, who led the people into the wildernefs, and undertook to exhibit divine, wonders +. One who came out of Egypt promised to cause the walls of Jerusalem to fall down; but the deluded multitudes who followed him were dispersed difperfed or deftroyed by the Romans, "fuffering" (to use the language of Josephus) "the just punish-"ment of their folly §." The nearer the Jews were to destruction, so much the more did these impossors multiply, and so much the more easy credit did they find with those, who were willing to have their miferies soothed by hope. Even during the conflagration of the temple, a false prophet encouraged the people with miraculous figns of deliverance *: nor did the total destruction of the city cure this madness; as appears by the conduct of an impossor at Cyrene †, who " promised to show them figns and appari-" tions."

* Josephus Antiq. l. 20. c. 5. § 1.

209

210

There is the moft perfect correspondence between the impostors described by Josephus, and those foretold by Christ, in the following particulars. I. According to Josephus, their appearance both preceded and accompanied the destruction of Jerusalem; and by Christ also they were distinctly foretold both as the distant  $\ddagger$  figns and fore-runners, and as the nearer  $\parallel$  and more immediate attendants, of that great and awful catastrophe. 2. Our Saviour describes them as severally assume the double character of a prophet and of the Melliah: and according to the Jewish historian, they both pretended to inspiration and

- § Joseph. Ant. c. 8. § 6. & de B. J. l. 2. c. 13. § 4, 5.
- * Joseph. de B. J. 1. 6. c. 5. § 2.
- + Id. ib. 1. 7. c. 11. § 1. onuera » Quisquara digen Unisgirutios.

- 1 Mat. xxiv. 5. Mark xiii. 6. Luke xxi. 8.
- || Mat. xxiv. 24. Mark xiii. 22.

and prophecy ¶, and undertook the peculiar office of the Meffiah *, the deliverance of God's people from their enemies. 3. " They shall give" (or undertake to exhibit) " great figns and wonders," fays the prophecy: and the hiftory relates the fact in perfectly corresponding language, " They promised to shew or " exhibit evident wonders and figns +." 4. Does our Saviour fay, that Ly their confident promifes of miracles, they would deceive many t of the unbelieving Jews, and the very elect, or Christians themselves I. were that possible; that is, could this be well suppofed of perfons, who certainly knew that the Meffiah was already come? Josephus informs us that these impostors drew away vast multitudes after 6 them; and that under pretence of divine inspiration, they raifed the enthulialm of the people to a degree of madne/s **. 5. The very places of their appearance are the fame in the prophecy, as in the hiftory; "the " defart 02

¶ As they flyled themselves prophets, so they professed to act πεοσχήματι θειασμέ, " under pretence of a divine afflatus." Joseph, de B. J. l. 2. c. 13. § 4.

* Luke xxiv. 21. et Grot. in loc.

+ Δάξαν γλε έφασαν έναεγῆ τίεατα κς σημώα. Joseph. Ant. l. 20. c. 8. § 6. This language of Josephus ferves both to explain and verify our Saviour's prediction, so as to remove all reasonable doubt concerning either its meaning or truth.

‡ Matth. xxiv. 5.

|| V. 24. compared with Rom. xvi. 13. Coll. iii. 12. I Theff. i. 4.

S On one occasion he mentions fix thousand; B. J. l. 6. c. 5.
S 2. on another thirty thousand; l. 2. c. 13. S 5.

** Aaiµovzv avéneibor. Id. ib. § 4.

212

" defart or wilderne fs, and the fecret chambers or " places of fecurity in the city *." 6. If our Saviour calls them deceivers, and fuppofes all their pretences (and confequently their pretences to miracles, as well as to the Meffiahship) to be founded in falfehood : Josephus calls them by the fame name +, and reprefents them as utterly difappointing all the promifes they had made to their followers, and every expectation they had raifed. Now, if no miracles were actually performed by these impostors; it is great weakness in Christians to affirm, that any were foretold by Chrift; as it is virtually branding him as a falfe prophct. But in the fense of the prediction affigned above, it received the most perfect accomplishment in the conduct and appearance of the Jewish impoftors, who only pretended to-miracles. And confidering how backward the Jewish Christians themfelves were, to give up all hope of deliverance from their fubjection to the Romans; it was an inftance of the wildom and goodness of our Saviour, to forewarn them against trufting to the fallacious promifes of perfons, who affirmed confidently that they were divinely raifed up to accomplifh fuch a deliverance; and by confiding in whom, the infatuated Jews were deceived and deftroyed beyond all recovery or redemption.

.III.

* Mat. xxiv. 26. Jofeph. Ant. l. 20. c. 8. § 6. et B. J. 1. 2. c. 13. § 4. et l. 6. c. 5. § 2.

+ Πλάνοι γλε άνθεωποι κζι άπατεώνες. B. J. l. 2. c. 13. § 4. See alfo Antiq. l. 20. c. 8. § 6.

ΠĿ

. All the falfe teachers in the apoftolic age, whether they rejected or corrupted Christianity, are reprefented as destitute of fupernatural gifts.

With regard even to the true apoftles of Chrift, and others who really performed miracles; these works could not be applied by them to any other purpofe, than the confirmation of the miffion and doctrines of Christ; inasmuch as they were always performed by his immediate power, in professed attestation of his authority, and not without the actual exercife of faith in his name, at the time of their performance. How then could real miracles be performed, in opposition to the claims or genuine doctrines of Chrift, by falfe apoftles? When St. Paul fays, "We can do nothing against the truth *;" does not this language imply, that no miracles could be wrought in attellation of fallehood? He threatens his oppofers at Corinth, with coming to them in a fhort time, that + " he might know, not the fpeech " (the eloquence) of them that were puffed up, but " the (miraculous) power;" with the want of which. it is evident, he here upbraids them. He adds, "For " the kingdom of God is not in word, but in " power;" it is erected and fupported by the immediate exertions of omnipotence: language that plainly intimates, that his oppofers were not immediately

03

Digitized by Google

2 Cor. xiii. 8.

1 Cor. iv. 19, 20. ch. v. 4.

diately commissioned to publish the gospel by God, because he did not support their claim by miracles. The power of miracles he elfewhere calls " the fign of an apoftle *;" and on a still different occasion, he thus defcribes and diftinguishes himself, " He that " worketh miracles amongft you +:" could miracles then be common both to him and his opponents? He warns the Corinthians against giving him occasion to exercife his miraculous power in their punishment: "What will ye? fhall I come unto you with a rod?" This is not the language of a perfon expecting miracles to be oppofed by miracles. Nay, he reprefents the leaders of the oppofite party as fupporting themfelves wholly by artifice and fraud : " ‡ Such are falfe " apostles, deceitful workers (or labourers in the " gofpel ||) transforming themfelves into the apoftles " of Chrift. And no marvel, for Satan himfelf is " transformed into an angel of light." It may be doubted, whether St. Paul is here fpeaking of any transformation of Satan, in the literal fense of the word: for the false apostles did not in this fense change themselves into the apostles of Christ, or affume their external shape and form. But the false apostles here referred to, pretended to preach gratis; which is what St. Paul really did at Corinth: and this groundless pretence was the fole foundation of their

- * 2 Cor. xii. 12.
- + Gal. iii. 2, 5.
- 1 2 Cor. 'xi. 13, 14.
- || Locke upon the place.

their claim to the apoftolical character. To prevent the Corinthians from being deceived by fuch or any other specious appearances or disguises, he reminds them, that the very worft characters might eafily affume the outward femblance of virtue; that there was not any temptation *, even of the most infernal kind, which did not strive to conceal its deformity, and affume an alluring and releftial form. It is poffible, however, that St. Paul may here refer to an opinion, common amongst the Heathens, that evil fpirits could render themfelves visible at pleasure, and affume the appearance of gods and demons +. Nor is it neceffary to fuppofe, that the apostle is here delivering his own opinion; he may be barely illuftrating his argument, by a commonly received fentiment concerning evil spirits 1.

04

Both

* Dr. Doddridge upon the place.

+ Porphyry (de Abstinent. 1. 2. § 39, 40.) fpeaking of fpiritual beings, and evil demons in particular, fays, "All thefe " are naturally invisible to men; but they make themselves " visible at pleasure, change their forms, and perfonate the " gods." Apuleius (in Apol. Socrat.) fays, At enim Pythagoricos mirari oppido folitos, fi quis fe negaret unquam vidiffe dæmonem. See Jamblichus, fect. 2. c. 3, and Porphyry cited below, ch. 4. fect. 2. article 2.

‡ Thus our Saviour draws a comparison between the Jews, and "the fpirits who walk through dry places ;" and the Pfalmift fpeaks of the "deaf adder that ftops her ear to the voice of the charmers," (perfons who used forbidden arts, Deut. xviii. 11.) with regard to which the authors of the Universal Hiftory observe, "There is no more occasion to understand it literal-"1y,

Both Paul and Peter reprefent the falle teachers as feducing their followers, not by miracles, but by fair speeches, and by a condescension to mens criminal paffions *. Jude describes them as " not having the fpirit +;" and John brands all their pretensions as impolture, " Thou hast tried them which fay they " are apostles, and are not; and hast found them " liars t." He lays it down as un universal maxim, " Every fpirit" (or pretender to a fpiritual and divine afflatus) " that confesseth not that Jefus Christ " is come in the flesh, is not of God "." And Paul in like manner declares, " that no man fpeaking by " the fpirit of God, calleth Jefus accurfed ¶." Neverthelefs, becaufe fuch oppofers of Christianity as these apostles speak of, could not be inspired by God; it has hence been inferred, that they were enabled to work miracles by the devil. But the former does by no means infer the latter. To understand these passages we must recollect, that John most certainly,

" ly, than if he had compared an evil tongue to the voice of a " fyren, the claws of an harpy, the eyes of a bafilifk, or any " other fabulous creature." V. 3. p. 491. 8vo ed. The words of the Pfalmift, however, are differently interpreted by others. See the learned Mr. Merrick's annotations on Pfalm lviii. 4, 5.

* Rom. xvi. 18. 1 Cor. iv. 9. Col. ii. 4, 8. 2 Pet. ii. 18.

Digitized by Google

- + V. 19.
- ‡ Rev. ii. 2.

|| 1 John iv. 3.

¶ 1 Cor. xii. 3.

tainly, and Paul * poffibly, refers to the Jewish antichrifts +, fome of whom affumed to themfelves the character of the Meffiah, and all of whom oppofed the claims of Jefus; and did it under the pretence of a divine afflatus and infpiration. Now, fince those who denied Jefus to be the Meffiah, pretended to be prophets of the true God, (herein differing from the idolatrous prophet mentioned by Mofes t); the apoftles direct their fellow Christians to conclude, that fuch pretences must be false; for this felf-evident reason, that God cannot contradict himself. Since Christians allowed, that God had borne testimony to Jefus, it was impossible he should ever bear testimony against him. As to any intercourse with evil spirits, or affistance from them; these prophets did not -pretend to it; nor do the apostles charge them with it; but

+ See what was observed above in the explication of Mat. xxiv. 24. and compare Whitby on 1 John iv. 1, 2.

‡ Deut. xiii. 1.

ß

Ę

217

but refolve their pretentions into human delution and forgery, as we have already feen.

IV.

St. Paul's prophecy * concerning the man of fin, " whole coming is after the working of Satan +, with " all power, and figns, and lying wonders ;" though frequently urged to fhew, that the papal hierarchy was to be fupported by real miracles, proves the very contrary. Whoever confiders the nature of the papal empire, (that most flagitious and daring usurpation on the government of God, and all the valuable rights of mankind!) will readily admit, that if ever the devil had a hearty zeal for any caufe, it must be for this; and that he would have exerted his utmost power for its support. Nevertheless the apostle, inftead of allowing that popery would have the advantage of true miracles, affirms that the coming of the man of fin was to be " with all power, and figns, " and wonders of a lie ";" that is, " with lying, or " fictitions

* 2 Theff. ii. 9, 10.

+ That this phrase, the working of Satan or an adversary, does not imply a miraculous agency, appears from the use of it, Ephef. ii. 2.

‡ Whoever compares this paffage with Heb. ii. 4. will find the fame terms applied both to the miracles of popery and Chriftianity; and confequently will be forced to maintain, that they are both equal, unlefs the latter alone were genuine, and the former counterfeit.

|| This is the true rendering of the original words, is πdom durájes

" fictitious power, and figns, and wonders." The apostle does not fay, that the wonders are wrought with an intention to deceive; but that the wonders themselves are a lie, the sole effect of falsehood and imposture. The church of Rome lays claim to a miraculous power, glories in it as a mark of the true church *; and from hence infers the validity of her pretenfions. Many learned protestants have allowed in part the truth of this claim, and admitted that fome real' miracles have been performed in the Roman church. But the infpired apostle brands them all as deceitful tricks, and fabulous legends. Such, many of the best attested are allowed to be, by the members of the Roman communion +; and fuch with duradues x3 orquéeous x3 régaons 4500 des. The word, lie, refers equally to all the preceding terms, and ought not to have been limited to the laft. That " the power, and figns, and wonders of a lie," denote " lying" or " fiftitious power, figns and wonders," by a ufual hebraifm; appears from Deut. xxxii. 20. 2 Sam. xii. 15. Pf. v. 6. Luke xvi. 6. Ephef. ii. 2. ch. iv. 24. Col. i. 3; and from the context alfo, where the like form of fpeech is ufed. " The man of fin" denotes a notorioufly finful man: and the deceivablenefs of unrighteoufnefs fignifies unrighteous deceptions. Nay, in the very place in queftion, the prefent tranflation renders " wonders of a lie," " lying wonders."

* Undecima nota est gloria miraculorum. Bellarmin. de notis ecclesize, l. 4. c. 14.

† They confels many even of thole miracles, which were attefted by witneffes upon oath, to be mere imposfures. Maraccius, speaking of certain bones, which were mistaken for thole of some eminent faints, fays, Vix credi potest, quot statim miracula with equal reason we may fafely pronounce them all. It is not therefore the power of miracles, (as some maintain*) but the making false pretences to it, that St. Paul here (and elfewhere †) affigns as one of the characteristics racula de iis in vulgus emanaverint, quæ etiam adjuratis teftibus confirmabantur. Et tamen nullum hic erat, nec effe poterat, verum miraculum. Prodr. pars 2. Melchior Canus complains, that the lives of the philosophers, and the histories of the Cefars, are written by Laertius and Suetonius with greater regard to truth, than the lives of the faints by the Catholics. And fpeaking of the golden legend, he fays, it contains for the most part, rather monsters of miracles, than true miracles. Other learned papifts have made the like complaints, as may be feen in Geddes's Tracts, V. iii. tract 2. p. 49. Even the miracles afcribed to the miffionaries of the Roman church in India, where they are most wanted, are denied by their gravest writers, Hospinian de Origin. Jesuitar. p. 330. Middleton's prefat. Dif. to his Letter from Rome, p. 97. and Acosta de procuranda Indorum falute, cited by the Criterion, p. 77, I add, that whenever any one of the orders of the Roman church endeavours to support its peculiar tenets by supernatural works; the other orders feldom fail to detect the cheat, or to treat it with all imaginable contempt. Will any one undertake, to produce one popish miracle, which is either more credible in its nature, or more ftrongly attefted ; than those which learned papills themfelves have condemned as impudent falfehoods?

* "Admitting (fays a very learned writer) that any of the "Romifh miracles were undeniable matters of fact; ---yet I "know not what the Bifhop of Rome would gain by it, but a "better title to be thought antichrift." Bifhop Newton's Differtations on the Prophecies, V. 2. p. 279, and Vol. 3. p. 223.-

+ See I Tim. iv. 1, 2. explained above, ch. 3. fect. 1. p. 141.

characteristics of the man of fin; and by which he is remarkably diffinguished from Mohammed and other impostors, to whom this prophecy has been improperly applied,

v.

The papacy feems to be farther characterifed in the Revelation of St. John *, " He doeth great won-" ders (or figns +) fo that he maketh fire come down " from heaven on the earth, in the fight of men; " and he deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, by " means of those miracles (or figns) which he has " power to do in the fight of the beaft."

Whatever be the true fense of this obscure passage, it ought not to have any meaning assigned it, repugnant to the numerous more plain declarations of the divine word. If the prediction of St. Paul which we last examined, brands all the miracles of popery as forgeries; this of St. John cannot allow them to be realities. Besides, there is this material difference in the two cases: the prophecy of St. Paul is delivered in much plainer terms, not under the cover of fymbolical representations; but the revelations made to St. John, were in the way of vision, in which there was frequent use of emblems and fymbols, with which we find the whole Apocalypse abounds. And therefore

* Ch. xiii. 13, 14.

 $\dagger \Sigma \eta \mu \tilde{e} a$ . The fame word is used in the original in both verses, though rendered by our translators wonders in the 13th, and miracles in the 14th verse.

fore it is more natural to give a figurative, than a literal conftruction to this language of St. John. " The making fire to come down from heaven," may poffibly refer to the anathemas and excommunications of the Roman church, flyled the thunders of the Vatican, which are flocking imprecations for fire from heaven, and were thought to expose men to its hotteft vengeance; (as a fymbol of which they used in pronouncing their excommunications, to fwing down a lighted torch from above *) and which have actually fet whole kingdoms in a flame, being inforced by princes and perfons in authority, who in the prophetic language are reprefented by the heavens. On either, or both these accounts, but more especially the former, the fire may be faid to come down from thence. The great figns he is here faid to perform, include thefe and other amazing artifices ufed by the pope, to perfuade an ignorant and credulous laity, that the vengeance of heaven will be armed against all his opposers. The fuccess of these frauds, and the credit they would gain with the members of the Roman communion, may be intimated in their being fpoken of as done, " in the fight of men," and in "the fight of the beaft." However this may be, I can fee no ground to conclude, that amongst the figns here referred to, we are to include true miracles +; both * Sir If. Newton, in his Observations on the Apocalypse, p. 319.

+ The word, onpeña, denotes figns and tokens, even though they are not miraculous; as we shewed above on Deut. xiii.

222

Digitized by Google

1;

both becaufe the word is applied to other events; and the fign here particularly specified, "the "making fite to come down from heaven," if understood figuratively, agreeably to the style of St. John's prophecy, was not miraculous. Moreover true miracles are never represented as means of delusion, but of conviction.

We have now diffinctly examined the feveral paffages of Scripture, which are generally thought, to allow the claims of falfe prophets to infpiration and miracles; and, I hope, it appears, either that thofe paffages do not refer to any fuch claims, or expressly deny their validity. Whether thefe prophets tpoke in the name of the true God, or in the name of falfe gods, the Scriptures reprefent them as totally deftitute of fupernatural knowledge and power, and expressly refolve all their pretences to them, into human artifice and falfehood *. This has been already fhewn,

1; and it is in the Apocalypie applied to furprifing events, ch. xii. 1, 2. ch. xv. 1. There may be a reference in this chapter to those firange appearances, (fuch as the bowing of crucifixes, the flaking and fliring their hands and feet, motions performed by fecret forings; and a thousand other things of the likekind;) which though mere human artifices, are reprefented as the effects of the divine power. The fraud practifed by the Roman clergy with regard to these things, was expected in fome remarkable inflances at the Reformation. See Burnet's Hiftory of the Reform. V. 1. p. 232.

* Some of our lateft and moft approved writers upon miracles affirm, that God will not fuffer falfe prophets to work miracles, " for as to lay men under a neceflity of being deceived, " or without giving honeft men plain evidence of the impof-" ture."

fhewn, both with refpect to their pretended miracles and prophecies. I will here add a few paffages, which more immediately refer to the latter. Mofes afcribes them to the arrogance or prefumption * of the prophet. Jeremiah calls them, " the vision of his own heart," not the fupernatural fuggestions of the devil. And Ezekiel defcribes the false prophets, as prophefying " out of their own hearts, and following their own " fpirit, and as having feen nothing ‡."

Before

" ture." See Mr. Hallet on miracles, and Dr. Benfon's Life of Chrift, p. 202, 203, 219, 220, 222, 234, 235, 236. The Scriptures feem to me to deny the power of falle prophets, to perform miracles under any circumstances whatever. And indeed if " the whole nature of miracles lay in being fuch " things, as are above the power of men," (as the doctor affirms, p. 236, compare p. 204;) if they may be performed by falle prophets, when they do not neceffarily subject honest men to delution; and if performed by fuch prophets, are to have no regard paid to them, (p. 202;) how are they, in their own nature, figns of a divine interpofition, and a divine miffion? Befides, there could be very little danger of any man's being deceived by the miracles of a falfe prophet, if he was clearly and critainly perfuaded, that these works are no diffinguishing test of a divine interposition; (as was shewn above, p. 88.) These would, in this cafe, be more probability of mens rejecting the miracles of a true prophet; from an apprehension, that infinite wildom would not employ ambiguous proofs of a divine miffion.

* Deut. xviii. 22. " The prophet has fpoken it prefumptuoufly;" per fuperbiam vel tumorem animi fui.

+ Ch. xxxiii. 16.• In ch. xiv. 14, he fays, " They prophefy unto you a falfe vision,—and the deceit of their heart."

‡ Ezek. xiii. 2, 3. See alfo Zechar. xiii. 4.

Before we proceed any farther; let us recollect how far we are advanced in examining into the fenfe of Scripture, concerning the author of miracles, whether of power or knowledge. We have attempted to fhew, that the Scripture denies the ability of performing any miracles, to angels, whether good or evil; to the fpirits of departed men; to the Heathen deities; to magicians, who pretended to an intercourse with them; and laftly, to all false prophets, upon whatever principles they grounded their pretenfions. Now these are the only agents, who have ever been conceived as capable of working miracles, either in opposition to God, or without an immediate commisfion from him. And confequently the Scripture, by denying the miraculous power of all thefe, does, in effect, deny, that any fingle miracle has ever been performed without the immediate interpolition of God. Farther evidence of this important point will occur in the following fections.

Þ

Digitized by Google

SÈCT.

SECT. V.

The Scriptures represent the one true God, as the fole creator and fovereign of the world, which he governs by fixed and invariable laws. To him they appropriate all miracles, and urge them as demonstrations of his Divinity and fole dominion over nature, in opposition to the claims of all other superior beings. The ancient controversy between the prophets of God and idolaters, flated.

•2

TN direct opposition to the numerous fictitious deities of the Pagans, whether they were fuppofed to poffess an original, or only a delegated power and authority; the prophets of the true God affirm, that he alone is God: "He is Jehovah, and there is no "God befides him: He is Jehovah, and there is " none else *." The Heathens maintained the existence of local + deities, whole power and prefence were circumscribed within narrow bounds. Aristotle very justly observes, " that it was by no means agreeable " to the fystem of religion established by law, to sup-" pole God to be one most powerful and excellent " being; the gods in that fystem being mutually bet-" ter one than another, as to many things ‡." Accordingly * Deut. iv. 35. II. xlv. 5, 6, 18, 21, 22. compare ch. xliii. 10-13. ch. xliv. 8. 2 Sam. vii. 22.

+ 1 Kings xx. 23.

‡ When arguing against Zeno, Aristotle fays, errie άπαντα έπικράτισον tordingly we find, that as each nation * had its chief deity; fo feveral of the gods held by the fame people were each of them fupreme in their respective provinces, and independent of the reft. One was fupreme ruler over the heavens, another over the air and winds, and others still different from these over the fea and earth and hell. But the language of revelation is, " Jehovah he is God in heaven above, " and upon the earth beneath, there is none elfe +:" he exists and operates in all places, without limits, and without controul t. To understand this language, it is neceffary to recollect, that the word, God, in Scripture denotes a governor or king; nor is more included in the general idea, than authority and dominion. Mofes is called a god to Pharoab #; becaufe he was appointed to controul and govern him. Judges and kings are frequently called gods with respect to their fubjects, over whom they rule ¶. And therefore when the facred writers affert, that there is no other P a έπι κράτις οι του 9ιου λαμβάναι, τότο δυνατώτατου και βίλτιςου λάγων, ου δοκέι δι τύτο κατά του νόμου, άλλα πολλά κράτζιες διαι άλλήλων οι 9ιοί. De Xenophane, Zenone, et Gorgia, c. 4. inter por. V. 2. p. 841, 842. ed. Paris.

* Judges xi. 24.

+ Deut. iv. 39.

1 Kings viii. 27. Pf. cxxxix. 1-12. If. xliii. 13.

Exod. vii. 1.

¶ Exod. xxi. 6. ch. xxii. 9, 28. Pf. lxxxii. 1, 6. Compare John x. 34, 35.

other God but Jehovah; they mean, that there is no fuperior being befides him, who has any power or dominion over mankind. Had there been other fuperior beings, who were vefted with power over the human race; the Scripture, we have feen *, would have allowed, that they were our gods or rulers.

The Heathens either believed the eternity + of the world, or afcribed its origin, and the generation of animals  $\ddagger$ , to elementary and fidereal deities. According to the eftablished fystem of theology, the world was begotten, not created; at once the offspring and the parent of gods, and it/elf a god  $\parallel$ . On the other hand, the facred penmen afcribe its creation to the fole operation (or rather to the almighty fiat  $\P$ ) of the one eternal Jehovah: "He made the fea, his hand "formed the dry land \*\*. He formed the light, and "created darkness ++. He created the heavens, and "the earth, and all the host of them  $\ddagger ;$ " that is, the whole

* Ch. 3. fect. 2. p. 237, 238.

+ Diodorus Siculus, p. 6. ed. Rhodomani.

‡ See above, p. 174.

|| See above, 111—114. What we call the creation or formation of the world, was in the Pagan fystem its generation, or a cosmogony. And their cosmogony or generation of the world was a theogony, or generation of gods.

Digitized by Google

¶ Pf. xxxiii. 6, 9. Pf. cxlviii. 5. Gen. i. 3.

** Pf. xcv. 5.

++ If. xlv. 7.

tt Gen. i. 1. ch. ii. 1. Pf. xxxiii. 6.

whole world, all the parts which compose, and all the creatures that inhabit it, whatever divine attributes and operations might be foolifhly afcribed to any of them by the Heathens. God afferts his fole prerogative in fuch language as this: "I am Jeho-" vah who maketh all things, who stretcheth forth " the heavens alone, who fpreadeth abroad the earth " by myself *." This truth is often inculcated, with the express defign of guarding the Israelites from worshipping the objects of nature +.

To these false gods, and to demons the Heathens ascribed the government of the world, the direction of all human affairs, the calamities and prosperity of perfons and nations. But the Scriptures celebrate Iehovah as the universal fovereign, who exercifes an abfolute dominion over all without any rival, without any co-adjutor or partner of his throne; " I am Je-" hovah, and befides me there is no Saviour.-There " is none can deliver out of my hand: I will work, " and who shall let it t? I make peace, and create " evil "." It was, indeed, the main defign of the Tewish difpensation, to convince the Israelites and the whole world, that as Jehovah created the world at first, so he referved the government of it in his own hands; and that there was no fuperior invisible being whatever, befides Jehovah, on whofe favour, the good

P 3

* If. xliv. 24.

+ Deut. iv. 79. Jerem. xiv. 22,

‡ If. xliii. 11, 13.

|| Ch. xlv. 7.

Digitized by Google

230

good or evil state of their lives did in any degree depend. This is the doctrine every where inculcated, in direct opposition to those who taught, that there were invisible beings, who were the authors both of bleffings and calamities to mankind. The order of the natural world is reprefented, as fixed " by his " decree, which shall not pass away;" and governed by his laws " which shall not be broken," by laws " which he has established for ever and ever ";" and confequently which cannot be controuled by any authority, except that by which they were at first ordained. If you fay, that the allowing a liberty to fuperior created intelligences to interpofe in human affairs, is one of those very laws which God has ordained; I answer, that if they can do this of themfelves, and without an immediate commission from God; then what the Scriptures affirm is not true; there are other superior invisible beings besides God, who can difpense both good and evil to mankind; and the order of events in the natural world is not fixed at all, but is dependent upon the pleafure of those superior beings +.

With regard to miracles, or deviations from the ordinary courfe of nature; the Scriptures refer them to God as their author. Nor do they afcribe them to him eminently, as fome  $\ddagger$  pretend; but abfolutely appropriate \* Pf. cxlviii. 6. Pf. 1xxxix. 37. Pf. cxix. 90, 91. Jerem. xxxi. 35, 36. ch. xxxiii. 25.

+ See above, ch. 2. fect. 3.

‡ Dr. Sykes on miracles, and others,

propriate them to him alone. Witnefs the fong of Mofes, "Who is like unto thee, O Jehovah, amongst " the gods? who is like unto thee,-doing won-" ders *?" What words can more strongly deny to all other beings the power of working miracles, and challenge it as the fole prerogative of the true God, than the following paffages? " Bleffed be Jehovah "God, the God of Ifrael, who only doeth wondrous " things +. Thou art great, and doest wondrous " things, thou art God alone t." Such language often occurs, " Thou art the God that doest wonders ||. " To him who alone doeth great wonders §." Whenever the facred writers occasionally mention any particular miracles, whether of power or knowledge; they affirm concerning every one of them feparately, what they do concerning all of them in general. Thus they affirm it to be the fole and exclusive prerogative of God, to raife the dead ¶, to open the eyes P 🖌 of * Exod. xv. 11. That by wonders, in this and the following paffages, we are to understand miracles, appears from the connection in which the word is used. The miracles more especially referred to are those wrought in favour of the Israelites; concerning which Moses declares, that all the annals of time could afford no instance of a like nature, Deut. iv. 32-36.

+ Pf. lxxii. 18.

‡ Pf. lxxxvi. 10.

Pf. lxxvii. 14.

§ Pf. cxxxvi. 4.

¶ Deut. xxxii. 39. 1 Sam. ii. 6. 2 Cor. i. 9.

Digitized by Google

of the blind \*, to tread upon the waves of the fea +, to fill the noife of its waves  $\ddagger$ , to reveal fecret and diftant transactions  $\parallel$ , to foretel future events \$, and to fearch the heart of man. These declarations of Scripture, though they are particularly levelled against the false pretences to prophecies and miracles amongst the Pagans, are no more to be reconciled with the notion of the devil's posses of a supernatural power, than with the opinion of any Heathen gods posses that power. If any being whatever can perform miracles, besides God, it is not true that God alone can perform them.

As the Scriptures reprefent miracles as works peculiar to God; fo they urge them as proofs of his fole Divinity, or of his claim to the diftinguishing character of Jehovah. To give us a clearer idea of this very important point, we must look back to the first account of miracles. When Moses, on his being appointed God's ambassiador to the people of Israel, and the court of Egypt, defired to be instructed by what title he should describe him; God was pleased to assume a name, which of all others was the most expressive of his nature, I AM, or JEHOVAH ¶. Both * Pf. cxlvi. 8.

232

+ Job ix. 8.

‡ Pf. 1xv. 9. Pf. cvii. 29.

|| Dan. ii. 28, 29, 47.

§ If. xlii. 9. ch. xlv. 21. ch. xlvi. 9, 10.

T Exod. iii. 13, 14, 15. In the 13th verse what is commonly

Both these names are in fense the fame; and express "his eternal, underived and immutable existence "and excellence *." They likewise affert this as his fole prerogative; and therefore neceffarily imply (what fome think they directly express) "his giving "being to all other things †," or his being the fovereign ly translated, I AM THAT I AM, is rendered by Mr. Purver, I AM HE WHO AM. Accordingly God ordered Mofes to tell the Israelites, I AM has fent me unto you. Though the word ehjeb be in the future, yet according to the genius of the Hebrew tongue, it is applicable to the prefent tenfe.

* Est autem hoc nomen, Ehjeh ascher Ehjeh, derivatum a verbo hajah, quod significat essentiam vel existentiam. Maimon. Mor. Nevoc. p. 1. c. 63.

Ç,

+ Ainfworth and others are of opinion, that Jehovah is a participle of hajah in piel; and that it does not only fignify to be, but to caule to be. Universal Hift. V. 3. p. 360, 361. In the foregoing part of that note, p. 358, the learned authors condemn our verfion for rendering Jehovah by LORD, and the LXX. for rendering it xver@-; though bishop Beveridge (V. I. p. III.) alledges, that zugues comes from zuga to be, as Jehovah from hajah. The last mentioned writer observes, p. 112, that the word, Jehovah, is never used with any other genitive cale after it; but fabaoth, though this occurs fo frequently. The title of Jehovah or LORD of hofts (or fabaoth) does not denote the God of battle ; as those affert it does, who would degrade the God of Israel to a level with the Heathen god of war, whose peculiar province it was, to prefide over battles. This very magnificent title is given to God, on account of his being the creator and fovereign of all other beings; the monarch, not of fome particular people and province, but of the whole universe. He created " the heavens, and the earth. and all the hoft of them," Gen. ii. 1. " He is the former of all reign creator and abfolute lord of the univerfe. This was defigned to prevent both the Ifraelites and Egyptians, from degrading him to the level of the tutelary deities of the Pagans, (whofe influence was thought to be confined to a particular country and people;) and by afferting his proper diffinguifhing character, to deny the claims of all their gods to any fhare in the creation and government of the world. In direct oppofition to these false gods, mere fictions of the human imagination, the God of Ifrael ftyles himfelf all things,—the LORD of hofts is his name," Jerem. li. 19, ch. x. 16. "Thus faith Jehovah, who giveth the fun for a light by day,—the LORD of hofts is his name," Jerem. xxxi. 35. See ch. xxxii, 18, 19. If. xlii, 5. ch. xliv. 24. ch. xlv, 5. Dan. iv. 35. The English reader should be reminded, that whenever LORD, in capital letters, occurs in our translation, Jehovah is used in the original, which I have generally retained in the passages cited in the fequel.

After I had drawn up the preceding part of this note, I found, that the celebrated Le Clerc was of the fame fentiment with Ainfworth, with respect to the meaning and derivation of Jehovah; though the former declares, he had never met with it in any author. I will transcribe a part of his note on Exod. vi. 3. Dubium non eft quin vox ab Trif fuit derivetur, quo factum ut fuspicarer Deum vocabulum Triffit derivetur, quo factum ut fuspicarer Deum vocabulum Triffit fuit faciet ut fit. We may, however, allow, that the word, Jehovah, was only defigned to express God's eternal and immutable existence, and to affert this as his fole prerogative; inafmuch as it neceffarily follows from hence, that all other beings owe their existence to his fovereign pleafure. And the miracles defigned to prove the former, ferve to afcertain the latter.

felf Jehovah*, " him who is +, and from whom all " other beings are derived." This construction of the word is confirmed by the fequel: God faid to Mofes, "I am Jehovah : and I appeared unto Abra-" ham, unto Ifaac, and unto Jacob, by the name (or " under the character) of God ALMIGHTY; but by " my name (or character of) JEHOVAH was I not " known unto them t." God had called himfelf by the name, Jehovah, to the Patriarchs ||; and they had invoked him by it: in what fenfe then was it unknown to them? Critics have fupposed, that it refers to God's giving being or life to his promises, by their actual accomplishments. But this feems a very groundlefs limitation of the word. Understand it in its just latitude, and God will appear to fpeak to the following effect : " I took your fathers under my powerful " protection,

* " I am Jehovah, that is my name, and my glory will I " not give to another, neither my praife to graven images." Ifaiah xlii. 8.

† As on other occasions he is styled the living God, in opposition to dead men, whom the Heathens worshipped as gods.

‡ Exod. vi. 3. •

|| Gen. xv. 7, 8. chap. xxvi. 24. ch. xxii. 14. ch. xxviii. 13.

§ Both Ainfworth and Le Clerc fuppofe, that the word, Jehovah, expresses God's causing his promifes to receive their accomplishment: but many of the passages cited by the latter, and particularly If. xlii. 5. ch. xlv. 5-7. Jerem. xxxi. 35, shew, that it must be taken in a still more extensive fense, and that it expresses his character as universal creator.

236

" protection, and granted them marks of my pecu-" liar favour; hereby acting rather under the cha-" racter of their God, than as the one eternal Deity, " and only fovereign of the universe. And though " your pious anceftors always entertained just ideas " of me as Jehovah; yet I did not make this my " true character known * and evident, in the confpi-" cuous manner I am now going to do. To your " fathers I revealed myfelf chiefly by private dreams " and visions : but now I shall fully vindicate and " proclaim my eternal Divinity, and my boundless " dominion, by the most public and flupendous mira-" cles." It was neceffary to explain, what is included in the term, Jehovah; inafmuch as the miracles of Mofes were defigned to prove, that this term was appropriate to the God of Ifrael.

To the Ifraelites God commanded Mofes to fay, " I AM hath fent me, unto you; Jehovah, the God " of your fathers appeared unto me t." Mofes was farther inftructed to tell the Ifraelites, " Ye fhall " know, that I am Jehovah your God, which bring-" eth you out from the burdens of the Egyptians t." The miraculous means of their deliverance were defigned, as Mofes fays in express terms, for the conviction

* To know often fignifies to make known: "I determined not to know any thing amongft you, fave Jefus Chrift," that is, this was what I determined to "make known amongft you," I Cor. ii. 2. See alfo ch. viii. 3, and Locke upon it.

+ Exod. iii. 14, 15.

‡ Exod. vi. 7.

ģ

ŭ

01

Ę

02 er.

â.,

ulé. riti

د. منابع غلبان

T.

day Giri

٢.

7

viction of the Ifraelites, or " that they might know, " that Jehovah he is God, and that there is none " elfe befides him *." When Moles went to Pharaoh, and told him that Jehovah, the God of Ifrael, demanded the release of his people; and the king of Egypt afked, " Who is Jehovah," and faid, " I know not Jehovah :" God declares to Mofes, " The " Egyptians shall know that I am Jehovah, when I " ftretch forth mine hand upon Egypt, and bring " out the children of Israel from amongst them t." Nay, each particular miracle is frequently alledged as a full demonstration of this grand point. God (by his prophet) faid to Pharaoh, IN THIS (that is, by turning the waters of the river into blood) " thou shalt know that I am Jehovah t." The miraculous plagues * Deut. iv. 35. compare Exod. x. 1, 2. ch. xi. 7. 2 Sam. vii. 22-24.

+ Ch. v. 1, 2. ch. vii. 5. ch. ix. 14. ch. xiv. 4, 18, 25.

‡ Exod. vii. 17. In like manner Mofes promifed Pharaoh, to remove the fecond plague, that of frogs, "that he might "know there was none like unto Jehovah," (ch. viii. 10.) or none befides him who could perform true miracles, (compare ch. xv. 11.)—The fwarms of flies were fent upon Egypt, while Gofhen was preferved from them, "to the end thou mayeft know," (as God faid to Pharaoh) "that I am Jehovah, in the midft of the earth," (ch. viii. 22.) or, "the fovereign of "the whole earth, not of one particular diffrict only." The metaphor, as Paulus Fagius obferves upon the place, is taken a regibus, qui fedes fuas fere habent in mediis provinciis, ut ex æquo illis profpicere pofiint.—To the fame effect, it is faid, the hail fhould be removed, that Pharaoh might know, "that the earth is Jehovah's." ch. ix. 20.

plagues of Egypt were not defigned, merely or principally to accomplish the deliverance of the Israelites from the bondage of Egypt; which might have been effected with fewer (or without any vifible) deviations from the ordinary course of nature. The principal end which God had in view, was infinitely more important, and the very fame with that which he proposed by taking the Israelites to be his peculiar people, viz. the manifestation of himself to the world. For it was not from any partial regards to them, that they were at first separated from the rest of mankind, but to accomplish the defigns of God's general providence, and (amongst other important purposes) to recover and preferve the knowlege of the true God, and to propagate it amongst the Heathen nations, (and thereby to prepare the world for the coming of Christ.) The nations were already funk into the groffeft idolatry, fuch as gave a fanction to the foulest crimes. Egypt was the parent and nurse of this idolatry. From hence it was propagated through many other nations. By their refidence in this country, the Ifraelites themfelves were defiled with its idols *. Jehovah, therefore, in his infinite wildom and goodnefs, was pleafed to accomplifh their redemption, in a manner the most proper to convince them, and the Egyptians, and the other nations, of. the evil and folly of idolatry, and to make himfelf known and adored as the only living God +. Pharaoh * Ezek. xx. 7. ch. xxiii. 2, 3. Joth. xxiv. 14.

† See Exod. ix. 14, 16. ch. xi. 7. ch. xiv. 4, 18. and compare If. xix. 21. Pf. xxii. 27, 28.

Digitized by Google

raoh was preferved, after he deferved to have been cut off for his opprefion and impiety, that by the new wonders his obstinacy would occasion, "God's " name might be declared through all the earth *." The * Exod. ix. 16. Though the paffages cited above, are ful-'ly fufficient to prove, that the refcue of the Ifraelites from their cruel bondage, was not (what too many have represented it) the whole defign of God in the punishment of the Egyptians; and there can be no necessity therefore of producing 2ny farther proofs of this point : yet I cannot forbear observing, that what has been advanced upon it, feems to be confirmed by what God fays to Mofes, Exod. xii. 12. " I will fmite all " the first born of the land of Egypt, both man and beast : and " against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment; I " am Jehovah." Some indeed think, that by gods we are here to understand the princes and rulers of Egypt : but they were very few in number, in comparison with the multitudes who fuffered the loss of their first born. Others are of opinion, that God threatens the idols of Egypt here, (as he does elfewhere, If. xix. 1. Jerem. xliii. 13.) and that they fuffered fome fuch judgment as befel Dagon, I Sam. v. 3, 4. This however is not supported by the history. Why should we not understand God as speaking concerning the deities of Egypt ? Let it be confidered, that the miraculous judgments hitherto inflicted upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians, were the wifeft means that could be employed to convince them of the claims of Jehovah, and of the utter impotence of their own gods. For the Nile, the elements, and other objects of nature which they worshipped, were themselves employed by Jehovah as the inftruments of their punishment. The death of the first born, both of man and beaft, was a farther condemnation of their falle religion. For in ancient times the priesthood was the privilege of primogeniture; in Egypt, their gods were taken from amongst the first born of their flocks and herds; and these animal gods were worthipped with a reference to their elementa-

¥Х

The effect they produced was answerable to this intention: for both the Israelites, and many of the Egyptians "feared Jehovah, and believed Jehovah *."

The miracles of fucceeding prophets had the fame most benevolent intention, with those of Moses. The paffage of the Israelites over Jordan, as well as that through the Red Sea, and their disposses of the Canaanites, had this ultimate view, " that all the " people of the earth might know the hand of Jeho-" vah, that it is mighty †." When God interposed for the deliverance of his people; it was that both they and all the kingdoms of the earth " might know " that he was Jehovah ‡." Accordingly good men prayed to God to " maintain the cause of Israel at all " times, that all the people of the earth might know " that ry and fidereal deities. The fatal cataftrophe therefore which befel the first born of Egypt, from which the Israelites were preferved, was the execution of judgment against all the gods, as well as against the people of that country. Thus was the great controversy concerning the claims of Jehovah, as sole monarch of the universe, and his right to demand the release of his people, finally determined. Those on whom such means of conviction could produce no lasting effect, were certainly ripe for utter excision.

* Exod. ix. 20, 21. ch. xii. 38. ch. xiv. 31. The like effect was produced by other miracles, Josh. ii. 10, 11. 1 Sam. xii. 18. 2 Chron. xx. 29.

+ Jofh. iv. 23, 24. Exod. xxxiv. 10:

2 Kings xix. 15-19, 35. compare 1 Kings xx. 13, 28. See alfo Pf. lxxxiii. 18.

Digitized by Google

" that Jehovah is God, and that there is none elfe "." And indeed the Ifraelites would have been destroyed, on account of their great propenfity to idolatry, had not God intended by their miraculous protection or chastifement, as they were obedient or disobedient, to affert and vindicate his own Divinity in the eyes of all the nations. The conclusion to be drawn from every fingle act of miraculous power, by those who attended to its true nature and defign, is the fame as Naaman expressed, when his leprofy was miraculoufly cured : "Behold ! now I know there is no God " in all the earth, but in Ifrael +." The king of Ifrael in particular confidered the cure of a leprofy as a proof of divine power, " Am I God, to kill and to " make alive, that this man doth fend unto me, to Q " recover

* I Kings viii. 59, 60. Notwithstanding the numerous paffages from the Old Teflament cited above, together with a multitude of others, affert the God of Israel to be " Jehovah, " the universal governor of the world, and the one only living " and true God;" and notwithstanding the Heathen gods are a thousand times reproached in Scripture as mere nullities : yet the celebrated Voltaire has, in different works, endeavoured to perfuade the world, that the Jews and their prophets acknowledged the local tutelary deities of other countries; and at the fame time infinuated, that they worshipped their own God under no higher character than those. His great difingenuity in quoting the Scriptures, is well expoled by the learned Mr. Findlay, in his " Vindication of the Sacred Books," p. 98. Would writers of fuch eminence as Mr. Voltaire, reft the cause of infidelity on the groffest misrepresentations, were they confcious of being able to support it by fair reafoning?

Digitized by Google

+ 2 Kings v. 15:

ť

àC:

Te.

ŀΖ

ļ.

th:

di.

0[2] 2][0

)cť

17 mst illur

1

61.T

ł,

•

ł

" recover a man of his leprofy *?" And though the gods of Egypt and Canaan were worfhipped by the moft immoral rites, with which the worfhip of Jehovah could not be charged; yet the prophets of God never urge this circumftance either in confutation of their claims to divinity, or in proof of his; but refer the decifion of both those claims to miracles alone. Whatever difference there may be between fome miracles and others with respect to grandeur, the Old Testament constantly represents all miracles, whether of knowledge or of power, as proofs that the God of Ifrael was Jehovah +. The New Testament also holds the fame language, when it styles miracles the works of God ‡, and speaks of them as designed, to recover idolaters to his faith # and worfhip.

How very different a view of miracles is this, from that given us by those learned moderns who affert, that they argue only the interposition of fome power more than human; that the lowest orders of fuperior intelligences may perform great miracles; and higher

* V. 7.

2.12

+ If. xii. 21-26. ch. xlii. 8, 9. ch. xliii. 9-13. ch. xliv. 8. ch. xlv. 18, 21, 22. ch. xlvi. 9, 10. ch. xlviii. 3. Jer. x. 5-16. Dan. ii. 11. 27, 28, 29. 47. In these passages, revealing fecrets, foretelling future events, delivering and faving, and the doing either good or evil in a supernatural manner; are not only afferted as the sole prerogatives of the true God; but urged as the decisive proofs of deity.

‡ See below, fe&. 6.

|| I Pet. i. 21. I Theff. i. 9.

1.

ງ (

higher orders of beings, greater miracles still; that no miracle recorded in Scripture can be pronounced beyond the power of all created beings in the uni-. verse to produce; and that in no case whatever, can the immediate interpolition of God be diffinguished certainly by the works themfelves *? When the adverfaries of revelation use fuch language, with a view to destroy its evidence, they speak in character. But what raifes our wonder is, its being held by fome of its ableft votaries and advocates, notwithstanding that revelation ftrongly afferts the fole dominion of Jeliovah over nature, and every deviation from the laws of nature, (that is, every miracle) to be in itfelf a demonstration of his being its creator and lord. Which of these two opinions is most conforant to reason, is a point discussed in the second chapter. We only obferve here, that they cannot both be true. Can those works be the fole prerogatives of Jehovah, and a proof of his fole and unrivalled fovereignty; which others befides him, and even when acting in opposition to him, have a power of performing as well as he? And can we fuccessfully maintain the argument from miracles in favour of revelation, if we do not adhere to the use which revelation itself makes of miracles?

The most able of our modern writers seem not to have attended to the true state of the antient controversy between the prophets of God and idolaters. Even the very learned and fagacious bishop Sherlock, Q 2 fpeaking

Digitized by Google

* Dr. Clarke at Boyle's Lectures, and others.

244

fpeaking of the miracles wrought for the conviction of Pharaoh, fays, "Here the queftion plainly was "between God under the character of the God of "the Hebrews, and the god of the Egyptians, which "of them was fupreme *." He afterwards adds *, "When the queftion is, Who is the mightieft, must "it not be decided in his favour who visibly exerts "the greatest acts of power †?" All the Heathen nations * Discourses, V. 1. p. 281, 285. At p. 279, he had affirmed, " God thought proper to exert himself in such acts of " power as should demonstrate his [uperiority above all gods of " the Heathen." And fo little did his Lordship attend to the hiftory, that he affirms, after the generality of divines, that the character of diffinction which God affumed, when he commiffioned Moles to work miracles, was that of the God of the He--brews, p. 270, 280; notwithstanding its being fo evident, that the diffinguishing character which God then affumed was that of Jehovah; and that the grand defign of Mofes's miracles was to prove, that the God of the Hebrews had a right to this title. The miracles of Mofes were indeed in part defigned to accomplish the deliverance of the Ifraelites; and in this view they demonstrated Jehovah to be "the God of the Hebrews :" a character under which God now appeared, though it was not now first affumed; for he had stood before in the fame relation to their anceftors. But had he appeared under no other or higher character than this; he would have been confounded with the feveral local deities of the Heathens. Whenever he was thus degraded as only the tutelary god of Ifrael; (as he was by Rabshakeh, 2 Kings xviii. 33, 34;) he vindicated his own proper character as Jehovah God, and fole monarch of the univerfe. 2 Kings xix. 14-35.

+ That in the cafe of a contest, he who performs the most and greatest miracles, gives evidence only of superior power, not

è

K.

ŝ.

12

et:

. Cli

üL

50

t

2ú

ſ.

.

nations had at that time their feveral local deities, whole respective claims did not interfere with one another; each deity having a particular province and people of his own. Hence it came to pass, that the god peculiar to each nation, never had his divinity called in question within his own district by the other So that had Jehovah appeared under no nations. higher character, than that of the God of the Hebrews; the Heathens might and would have readily admitted it, without departing from their own princi-But the God of Ifrael affuming the title of Jeples. hovah, and declaring this to be his diffinguishing name and memorial, by which he would always be remembered and celebrated *; his claims were abfolutely fubverfive of those of all other gods. It was the fundamental article of the Jewish religion, that their God was Jehovah, and God alone; and that all the Heathen deities had no power or influence over the affairs of mankind, within any limits whatfoever. And therefore the question never could be, Who is the mightiest, Jehovah or the rival gods of Paganifm. Any figns of power given by the latter, would have overthrown the doctrine of Jehovah's prophets, and infringed his prerogative as the fole author and fovereign of nature. If he was Jehovah, Q 3 there.

not of abfolute fupremacy; was shewn above, ch. 2. fect. 6. p. 83. And how unfatisfactory the bishop's folution is, when applied to the works of the magicians in Egypt, will be shewn below, ch. 4. fect. 1.

* Exod. iii. 15.

245

246

there could be no other fovereign of nature: and if there was any other fovereign of nature, he was not Jehovah, or the only living and true God. Accordingly we find in fact, that in the contest between the Ifraelites and Egyptians, and in every fucceeding conteft, the question was, Is the God of Ifrael Jehovah, in the full and proper fenfe of that expression? In this there was another question involved, Are any of the reputed gods of the Heathens truly Gods? or do they poffefs any of that power and dominion afcribed to them by their worfhippers? And how was this question to be decided, but by miracles? A power and dominion over nature cannot be more effectually eftablished, than by changing or fuspending the course of its operations. Accordingly Pharaoh demanded of Moles a fign *, as a proof of his million from Je-And in the grand contest between Elijah hovah. and the prophets of Baal; as the question was, Who is God, Jehovah or Baal; fo both fides agreed to have it determined by a fingle miracle. Elijah had no conception, that Jehovah and Baal could both of them be gods, one of them greater than the other. On the contrary, he supposes one of them only could be God, or have any dominion over nature, or power of working a miracle, and confequently a title to worship; when he fays, " If Jehovah be God, sol-" low him: but if Baal, follow him +." The propofal he afterwards made of deciding the controverſy

* Exod. vii. 9.,

+ I Kings xviii. 21.

fy by a fingle miracle, (not by the greater in number or degree,) " The God that answereth by fire, let him be God," whether Baal or Jehovah *; is a demonstration that Elijah had no expectation that both Baal and Jehovah could interpofe in this miraculous manner; becaufe this would rather have proved both of them to be gods, than that Jehovah alone was God; which was the point to be decided. And had Baal answered by fire, this point had been determined against Elijah, and he must have acknowledged that Baal was god; answering by fire, being, in his opinion, a valid proof of a divine interpolition; the very touchstone by which he himself had defired the claims both of Jehovah and Baal might be tried, in order effectually to diffinguish which were genuine, and which were counterfeit. Elijah allowed the priefts of Baal to make the experiment first, and to try to engage him to answer them by fire; firmly affured of his utter impotence, and defirous of expofing him in the prefence of his deluded worfhippers. All application to Baal being ineffectual, Elijah prayed for fire from heaven, not to manifest the *[uperiori*ty of the God of Ifrael, but his fole Divinity, " that " it might be known that Jehovah was God in If-" rael, and Jehovah God +." When the fire of Jehovah fell and confumed the facrifice, the people acknowledged, " Jehovah, he is God; Jehovah, he is God t." This conclusion was just, upon the princi-Q 4 ple

* V. 24.

+ 1 Kings xviii. 36, 37.

‡ V. 39.

Digitized by Google

247

ple maintained above ||, that the laws of nature being ordained by God, their operation and effects cannot be controuled by any fuperior beings befides him. If this principle be false, could a fingle miracle confute the claims of the Heathen deities, and demonstrate Jehovah to be the only fovereign of nature? But it is, I hope, needlefs to fhew, that revelation confirms the dictates of reason on this subject. Here we have no other view, than to illustrate the state of the ancient controversy between the prophets of God and idolaters; and by that means to confirm what has been already urged to fhew, that the Scriptures represent all miracles as the prerogatives of the one eternal Divinity, and as proofs of his being Jehovah, They do this in a manner, that and God alone. plainly fhews their having no apprehenfion, that any fuperior beings whatever, befides God, had a power of producing these effects.

Digitized by Google

|| Ch. 2. fect. 3.

248

SECT.

a greate States a

SECT. VI.

The Scriptures uniformly reprefent all miracles as being, in themfelves, an abfolute demonstration of the divinity of the mission and doctrine of the prophets, at whose instance they are performed; and never direct us to regard their doctrines as a test of the miracles being the effect of a divine interposition.

WHEN God commissioned Moles to deliver the Israelites out of Egypt; he at the fame enabled him to perform figns and wonders, to procure him credit both with the Israelites *, and the Egyptians +. Miracles were the only testimonials urged with either, in proof of his mission from Jehovah. And it was also upon this evidence alone, that the laws of Moles were afterwards received by the Israelites as divine injunctions ‡, and his authority fupported amongst them; though they were too much difposed to disobey the one, and murmur against the other ||. They did not however try his miracles by his * Exod. iv. 1-5, 8, 9. See also Numb. xvi. 28-30. Deut. iv. 39.

+ Exod. vii. 8.

‡ Exod. xix. 3-8. ch. xxiv. 3.

|| When the Ifraelites charged Mofes with ambition and ufurpation, he appeals to a miracle in proof of his divine commiffion, Numb. xvi. 13, 28, 29, "Hereby ye fhall know that " the Lord has fent me.—If the Lord make a new thing, and the his laws; nor dispute the divine original of the former, merely becaule many of the latter were expenfive and painful, and had no intrinfic excellence to recommend them. Nor did Mofes, when he proved by miracles his commission to require of Pharaoh the release of the Israelites, appeal to the equity of his demand, in confirmation of the divinity of his works; though he might have fhewn, that the bondage of the Ifraelites was the highest reproach to the gratitude of the Egyptians, whole country had been faved by Jofeph, and a violation of all the laws of hospitality, and of all the promifes of protection and kindnefs made to the Ifraelites, when they first came into Egypt. But Mofes refted the proof of his authority upon the fole evidence of his works, as plainly difcovering the hand of God. The fucceeding prophets* under the Old Testament, proceeded upon the fame principle; and appealed to miracles alone, as an unquestionable demonstration of their mission from God. Elijah in particular thus prays to God to answer him by fire, " Let it be known this day, that thou art "God in Israel, and that I am thy fervant, and that «I

250

" the earth open her mouth," &c. It was by a miracle likewife that Samuel convinced the Ifraelites of their fault in alking a king, I Sam. xii. 16—19.

* Jofh. iii. 7. ch. iv. 14. 1 Sam. x. 1-7. ch. xii. 16-18. t Kings xiii. 3. ch. xvii. 24. 2 Kings v. 15. In like manner with regard to prophecies, by their accomplifhment it fhall be known that a prophet has been amongst them, Ezek. xxxiii. 33. Jer. xxviii. 9. 1 Sam. iii. 19, 20. compare Deut. xviii. 22.

" I have done all thefe things at thy word "." The very fame use is made of the miracles of the New Testament. But this being a point which has been controverted both by the adverfaries and advocates of the Christrian revelation; (the former fometimes denying, that the miracles of the Gofpel were defigned to atteft Christ's divine mission; and the latter often afferting, that they are urged only as conditional attestations of it;) I will examine distinctly the passages which fpeak of the author and end of the Gofpel miracles; especially as I do not remember to have feen them collected together, much lefs placed in (what appears to me to be) their true light. The miracles of Christ, and his apostles shall be considered separately.

I.

With regard to our Saviour; just before he entered upon his public ministry, he was qualified for the discharge of it, by receiving "the Spirit of God without measure t," or for universal and perpetual use, and not as the former prophets had received it, for a limited time and occasion. Accordingly he refers both his doctrine and his works to God as their author. "He spake as the Father taught him, and gave him commandment t." His miracles he styles "the

* 1 Kings xviii. 36.

† John iii. 34.

‡ John viii. 28. ch. xii. 49, 50. In farther proof of his referring his doctrine to God, the following paffages might be appealed

" the works of God," and " the works of his Father *;" which would have been an improper mode of expression, if any one else could have done the fame works. Christ expressly associate the form to " the finger or Spirit of God +;" and affirms on one occasion, " The Son can do nothing of himself ‡;" and on another, " The words that I speak unto you, " Lspeak not of myself. But the Father that dwell-" eth in me, he doth the works 1," whereby those words are confirmed. He represents them as a visible and very confpicuous display of the " glory § and power t of God." His disciples, in like manner, appealed to, ch. viii. 26, 38, 40. ch. vii. 16, 17. ch. xiv. 10, 24. Agreeably hereto we are told, " that the Spirit of the Lord " was upon him, anointing him to preach the Gofpel," Luke iv, 18, and that after his refurrection " he through the Holy " Ghoft gave commandments unto his apoftles," Acts i. 2. See Whitby's preface to St. John's Gofpel.

* John ix. 3. ch. x. 37. ch. v. 36.

+ Mat. xii, 28, Luke xi. 20.

‡ John v. 19.

252

|| John xiv. 10.

§ Ch. xi. 4. In the 40th verfe Christ, when going to raise Lazarus, thus addreffes Martha, "Said I not unto thee, that "if thou wouldst believe, thou shouldst fee the glory of "God?"

1 "To whom hath THE ARM OF THE LORD been revealed ?" John xii. 37, 38. It is with a peculiar reference to the miracles of Chrift, that he frequently affirms, "that feeing him," was

fpeak of them as works, "which God did by him *;" and declare, "God anointed Jefus of Nazareth with "the Holy Ghoft and with power, who went about "doing good, and healing all that were opprefied "with the devil, for God was with him +."

Agreeably to this representation of their author, Christ appeals to his miracles as a demonstration (not a partial and conditional, but a compleat and abfolute demonstration) of his mission from God. He tells the Jews, " The works which my Father has " given me to finish (or to perform) the fame works " that I do, bear witnefs of me, that the Father has " fent me." He adds, " Even the Father himself " which hath fent me, hath born witnefs of met." Just as he was going to perform one particular miracle, he made a public appeal to God, " that men" · (by that fingle miracle) " might believe that the Father had fent him "." And St. Peter styles him, " a " man approved of God, (or confpicuoufly demon-" ftrated by God § to be his meffenger) by miracles, " and was " feeing God who fent him." John xii. 44, 45. ch. xiv. 9–12. ch. xv. 24.

* Acts ii. 22.

+ Ch. x. 33. St. Luke alfo fays, ch. iv. 1, 14. " Jefus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee," which is explained Mat. iv. 23, 24, " He healed all manner of difeafes."

‡ John v. 36, 37. See alfo ch. viii. 18, 28, 29, 42, 54. ch. x. 35, 36.

Digitized by Google

|| Ch. xi. 41, 42.

§ Από τέ Θιέ άποδιδει μένον. Acts ii. 22.

" and wonders, and figns." This language of Chrift and his apoftles implies, that his miracles were works appropriate to the Father, and therefore, in themfelves, and apart from all confideration of his doctrine; a full demonstration of his divine mission.

The miracles of Chrift were farther defigned to evince his peculiar character as the Meffiah or anointed. But here it will be necessary previously to confider, what is included in this character : a point which has been overlooked * by our best writers upon the fubject of miracles; and the overlooking of which has, I apprehend, been one caufe of their not difcerning the peculiar and direct defign of the New Testament miracles, or at least occasioned their speaking of it in too vague and indeterminate a manner. The kings of Ifrael (those vice roys of God, who fat upon God's throne,) were installed in their office, by the ceremony of anointing them with oil, and very frequently diffinguished by this title +, " the Lord's anointed." When this term is applied to Chrift, it conveys to us the idea of " a king, immediately ap-" pointed by God, and qualified for that office by a " divine

* I take notice of this overfight, not merely for the fake of fhewing the neceffity of here laying before the reader, a fuller account of the ends propoled by the Golpel miracles, than any that has been given by former writers; but allo of fhewing in general, how neceffary it is to examine every thing ourfelves; without trufting to the representation even of learned, judicious, and candid men.

+ This title was not indeed peculiar to the kings of Ifrael; but it belonged to them eminently.

254

" divine unction," the unlimited communication, and perpetual refidence of the Holy Ghoft. The two grand branches of Christ's regal office are " legislation," and " the distribution of rewards and punishments amongst his subjects," according to their different behaviour. In ancient times kings were also judges *; and indeed the administration of justice is a principal act of government, and infeparable from the office of fovereign princes. An authority to difpenfe pardon, is likewife an effential branch of the royal prerogative, and fuch as it was neceffary the fovereign of mankind should be invested with, in order to his encouraging his fubjects, who were in a ftate of guilt and revolt from God, to return to their allegiance +. And the kingdom of Chrift not being of a temporal nature, but fpiritual and heavenly, and the chief bleffings of it being fuch as could not be enjoyed in their proper extent in this world, or even in

* "Be wife now therefore, O ye kings: be infructed ye judges of the earth." Pf. ii. 10. compare I Sam. viii. 5, 7. Our Saviour declares, that a judicial power belongs to him as the Meffiah, "The Father has given him authority to execute judgment alfo, becaufe he is the fon of man," John v. 27. He fpeaks of himfelf under the character of a king, when he defcribes his coming to judge the world, Mat. xxv. 34. And St. Paul calls his appearance as the judge of the living and the dead, bis kingdom, 2 Tim. iv. I. See Acts x. 42.

+ Acts vi. 31. ch. x. 43. It is observed in Livy, Dec. 1. 1. 2. c. 3, that what renders the kingly government dear to the people, is the liberty of pardoning; Regem hominem effe, a quo impetres, ubi jus, ubi injuria opus fit : effe gratiæ locum, effe beneficio; & irasci & ignoscere posse.

256

in the future state while mankind continued under the power of death; it was abfolutely neceffary, that Chrift fhould be authorized by God to raife the dead, in order to their being judged, and either rewarded or condemned *. All the other exercises of his royal power, are only fo many preparations for the laft grand act, of inftating all the children of God in a - bleffed immortality. The notion we are to form of Jefus as the Mefliah, is that of the (promifed and) divinely conflituted prince and Saviour +. In his legislative and judicial capacity, he is spoken of as a king: and when he exercises his power in dispensing divine pardon, in recovering mankind from the dominion of death; and putting the righteous of every age and nation into the poffeffion of eternal life, he is defcribed as a Saviour. But, ftrictly speaking, this latter office is included in the former. Christ's rovalty would have been but an empty title, without the power of distributing rewards and punishments, to inforce the obedience of his fubjects. In a word, the Meffiahship of Jesus denotes his regal commission and power, or his right by divine defignation to dominion and judicature over mankind. And this is what the miracles of Chrift were defigned to establish.

At the first opening of his ministry, he proclaimed the joyful tidings of the approach or arrival of the Messiah, or of the kingdom of heaven; asserted his own authority to give laws, and to administer government * See John v. 27-29.

+ Acts v. 31.

ment in this kingdom of God; and at the fame time urged his miracles as a full and adequate proof of his regal investiture and commission. In opposition to those who accused him of a confederacy with Satan, he affirms, " If I cast out demons by the Spi-" rit of God, then is the kingdom of God come " unto you *:" which implied, that he himfelf was the perfon, under whom that kingdom was to be erected. To those who defired him, in case he was the Chrift, plainly to declare it, he replied, " I told " you who I am, and ye believed not. The works " that I do in my Father's name, they bear wit-" nefs of me.----Say ye of him, whom the Father " has fanctified" (or fet apart to the office of the Meffiah) " and fent into the world" (under fo high a character), " Thou blasphemest; because I faid, " I am the Son of God +? If I do not the works of " my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though " ye believe not me," i. e. my testimony, " BELIEVE " THE WORKS," which are the teltimony of God: " that" by these visible displays of his power and authority, "ye may know and believe, that the Father " is in me, and I in him t." To his difciples he fpeaks the fame language, " Believe me that I am " in the Father, and the Father in me: or elfe be-Ŕ " lieve

* Mat. xii. 28. Luke xi. 20.

† The Son of God, and the Meffiah or the Chrift, are equivalent terms. Mat. xvi. 16. John. vi. 69. Mat. xxvi. 63. Luke xxii. 66, 70. John i. 34-41. Compare Prov. iv. 3. Pf. ii. 7, 12. 2 Sam. vii. 14.

‡ John x. 24, 25, 36-38. ch. viii. 28, 29.

" lieve me' FOR THE VERY WORKS SAKE *:" which are the most authentic testimonials of my union with the Father, and of his dwelling and operating in me by a permanent influence; fo that, properly, it is God who speaks and acts by me. In answer to that inquiry, by a deputation to Jefus from the Baptift, " Art thou He that should come?" he refers them to his miracles for fatisfaction †. And because his miracles evinced his dignity and authority as the Meffiah, he affirms their intention to be, " that the " Son of God might be glorified thereby "." His divine commission and prerogative to dispense spiritual bleffings, is particularly pointed out, as a most effential branch of his office, and at the fame time most remote from the conception of the worldlyminded Jews. When he healed the maladies of those, who, from a principle of faith, applied to him, he declared he did it with this view, " that men " might know, that the Son of man had power on " earth to forgive fins §." And to the end, they might regard him as the dispenser of eternal life to good,

○# Ch. xiv. 10, 11.

† " The blind receive their fight, the lame walk," &c. Mat. xi. 5. Luke vii. 21.

|| John xi. 4. By his first miracle, " he manifested forth his glory." John ii. 11.

§ Mark ii. 10, 11. Christ's reasoning here supposes, that the power of healing diseases was no less the prerogative of God, than that of pardoning fins; and therefore that neither could be communicated to any, but by God alone.

good men, after having raifed them from the dead; before he called Lazarus from the grave, he stiles himfelf "the refurrection and the life," and affured his disciples, " he that believes on me, though he " were dead, yet shall he live *." The power of restoring the dead to life, he elsewhere speaks of as the immediate gift of his Father: and then proceeds to affert his power to call all mankind from their graves, that they might be adjudged to everlasting life or death +. And inafmuch as all his miracles, by proving him to be the Meffiah, established his commission from God to raife the dead, (without which he could neither judge his fubjects, nor beftow upon them the promifed recompence); we find him upon all occafions, and particularly when he fed five thousand with a few loaves and fifnes, afferting his character as the dispenser of eternal life ±; adding, " for him " has God the Father fealed," his miracles being as authentic credentials of his Meffiahship, as the royal feal is of a commission from a prince, whose feal it is: which expression strongly implies, that miracles are a feal which none but God can ufe. If impoftors are allowed to perform them, they are no authentic proof of a divine miffion, any more than the royal feal would be of an order from a prince, who permitted others, and even his enemies, to have a R 2 .duplicate

* John xi. 25, 26.

.† Ch. v. 20, 21, 25, 29. See ch. vi. 39, 40, 44, 45.

‡ " The Son of man shall give unto you eternal life." John vi. 27.

259

260

duplicate or counterpart of the fame. In a word, all Christ's miracles were performed, (and all his prophecies \* likewife were delivered.) with exactly the fame view with which they were committed to writing, " that we might believe, that Jefus is the " Chrift, the Son of God; and that believing we " might have life through his name +." The effect they produced was answerable to this defign of their performance. They carried along with them a conviction of their divinity: " No man," faid Nicodemus to our Saviour, " can do these miracles that " thou doft, except God be with him t." And " the " multitude," when they faw his works, " marvel-" led, and glorified God, who had given fuch power " unto men "." Accordingly his miracles wrought a perfuasion in fome, that Jefus was a divine prophet  $\S$ ; and in others, that he was the Meffiah  $\S$ . If miracles were not conclusive, and even cogent arguments of a divine mission, the resistance of these means of conviction would not have been upbraided by \* "Now I tell you before it come, that when it is come "to pafs, ye may believe that I am he." John xiii. 19. See ch. ii. 22. ch. xiv. 29. ch. xvi. 4, 30. 1 Cor. xiv. 25. Rev. xix. 10.

+ John xx. 31. See ch. xi. 15.

1 John iii. 2.

|| Mat. ix. 8. See John ix. 33.

§ Mat. xii. 23. John ii. 11, 22, 23. ch. iii. 2. ch. iv. 45, 52, 53. ch. vi. 14. ch. vii. 31. ch. ix. 35-38. ch. x. 44. ch. xi. 45, 47, 48. ch. xii. 11. Luke xxiv. 19. by Chrift with fo much feverity, nor made a ground of the most aggravated condemnation *. On the other hand, Chrift declares, " If I had not done " amongst them the works which none other man " did," (that is, fuch as none but a truly divine messenger can perform,) " they had not had fin: " but now have they both feen, and hated both me " and my Father +."

R<sub>3</sub>

* Mat. x. 15. ch. xi. 20-24. ch. xii. 31. John xii. 37. ch. xv. 22-25. Heb. ii. 3, 4. ch. vi. 4. God proceeded to execute judgment upon Pharaoh, upon his not yielding to the evidence of the first miracle; and Zacharias was struck dumb, for not giving credit to a fingle divine appearance: which feems to imply, that every miracle bears upon it the visible stamp of divinity. And wherein does the common doctrine concerning miracles being wrought by evil spirits, differ from "the blasshemy against the Holy Ghost," (so feverely condemned in those who imputed Christ's cure of demoniacs to the affistance of demons,) except in its not arguing malice against Christ? The Jews referred only one species of Christ's miracles to the devil : many Christians affert, that most, if not all, his miracles might be wrought by evil spirits.

+ John xv. 24. This paffage has been generally thought to affirm, that the perfonal miracles of Chrift were greater than those of Moses, or any of the ancient prophets; which was fcarce true at that time. Chrift is here diffinguishing himself from all falle prophets, whom the Jews were too much inclined to follow, even without any evidence of their mission, and from a mere relish of their corrupt doctrine. The expression is fomewhat parallel to John x. 37. "If I do not the "works of my Father, believe me not." Both these passfages teach us in the strongest manner, that miracles are works which no impostor, nor any but God, can perform, and in themselves authentic proofs of a divine mission.

On

On the third day after he had fuffered death, under the falle imputation of blass phemy and imposture; he was raised from the dead: a miracle which the Scripture ascribes "to the working of God's mighty power \*," and confiders as the capital and most authentic declaration of Jesus's being "the Son of God +," and the true Messiah; and to which he had often referred his enemies for conviction  $\ddagger$ . The regal power of the Messiah, including in it a judicial as well as a legislative authority; the resurrection of Chriss, and his advancement to the full possible of his regal power, is spoken of as a completion of the evidence, and as a commanding argument of his being appointed to judge the world  $\parallel$ .

Ц.

With regard to the miracles performed by the apoftles of Chrift, after his afcenfion into heaven; as they are afcribed to the agency of the Spirit of God §, even to " the Spirit of truth which proceedeth (cometh forth) from the Father ¶," and is difpenfed through the * Ephef. i. 19. Col. ii. 12.

+ Rom. i. 4.

‡ John ii. 18. Mat. xii. 38. ch. xvi. 1.

|| Acts xvii. 31. In this paffage, misin maganyan maon, "having offered faith to all men;" faith is put for the evidence afforded, or the perfuasive argument whereby it is wrought.

Digitized by Google

§ Rom. xv. 19. 1 Cor. xii. 4-11. Heb. ii. 4.

¶ John xv. 26.

argue a divine Interpolition.

the mediation of Chrift *; fo they are urged as a full vindication of the character of Chrift from the afperfions and calumnies of his enemies, as a proof of the truth of his refurrection and advancement to celeftial dignity and power, as a confirmation of his claims to be a divine meffenger and the Son of God, as a testimony of God and of Chrift to those whom he commissioned to affert these claims, or to attest the facts (his refurrection in particular) on which they were founded +; or in other words, as an indubitable divine testimony to the doctrine they preached, when they taught Jefus to be the Meffiah, by faith in whom pardon and eternal life were to be obtained. Our Saviour promifed his followers, " that they should do greater works " than he had done, becaufe he went to the Father," (or was to be exalted to power in his prefence and kingdom,) when, as the effect and evidence of his exaltation, he was to receive from the Father, and dispense to his followers, the Holy Ghost t. " And " when he is come, he will" (by the miracles he will enable you to perform in my name) " reprove" (or * Tit. iii. 6. " The Father," fays our Lord, " will fend " him in my name. I will pray the Father, and he shall give " you another Comforter or Advocate. I will fend him unto " you from the Father." John xiv. 26. ch. xv. 26.

R 4

+ The apoftles received their commission from Christ; John xx. 31. ch. xvii. 18. and were appointed to be the witneffes of his refurrection; ch. xv. 27. Acts i. 8. ch. ii. 22, 23. ch. x. 39, 41. ch. xiii. 31. 1 Cor. xv. 14, 15.

, ‡ John xiv. 12. ch. xv. 26. Acts ii. 33-36.

Proofs from Revelution, that Miracles

(or rather, convince) " the world of fin," of their heinous guilt in rejecting and condemning me to death as an impostor, " and of" the " righteousness" of my character and the justice of my claims, " and of" the equity of that "judgment," which will be executed upon my enemies *. " He shall testify of " me +. He shall glorify me 1. At that day," fays Chrift, " ye shall know, that I am in my Father, and " you in me, and I in you ||." He intercedes with his Father, on the behalf both of his apostles, and of their converts, " that they may be one," (by a common participation of the Spirit,) " as § thou, Father, art " in me, and I in thee; that they also may be one " in us; that the world" (by the visible operations of that Spirit, which I shall receive from thee, and impart to them,) " may believe that thou hast fent " me." And " the glory" (the power and honour " of performing miracles by the Spirit) " which thou " haft given me, I have given them : that they may " be one, even as we are one; that the world may " know that thou haft fent me, and haft loved them, " as thou hast loved me." And just before his afcention

• * John xvi. 8—11.

+ Ch. xv. 26.

‡ Ch. xvi. 14.

|| Ch. xiv. 20. ch. xvii. 21-23. Compare ch. x. 38. ch. xiv. 10, 11, cited above; and confult Dr. Whitby on these feveral places, and on Ephes. iv. 4.

§ John. xvii. 21-23. As, in this place, denotes refemblance, not equality: for in Christ dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

264

cenfion he tells his disciples, "Ye shall receive power " after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and " ye shall be witness unto me *."

Conformable to this declared intention of Chrift in promifing and beftowing the gifts and miracles of the Holy Ghost, are the several uses to which they are applied by the apoftles. When they received the gift of tongues, St. Peter tells the Jews, " Chrift be-" ing by the right hand of God exalted, and having " received of the Father the promife of the Holy " Ghost, he has shed forth this, which ye now see " and hear +." And from this effusion of the Spirit, as well as from the testimony of prophecy, he argues, " that God had made Jefus both Lord and Chrift+." "We," fays the fame apoftle afterwards, " are wit-" neffes of these things," (viz. the refurrection and exaltation of Jefus,) " and fo alfo is the Holy "Ghoft t." The Scriptures likewife inform us on other occasions, that " with great power" (by very illustrious miracles) " gave the apolles witness of " the refurrection of the Lord Jefus "." The manner in which the apostles performed their miracles, shews that they were efpecially defigned as an immediate testimony to the refurrection and glory of Christ. " In the name of Jefus of Nazareth rife up and " walk s," faid Peter to the lame man at the gate of the - * Acts i. 8.

- + Ch. ii. 33-36.
- ‡ Acts v. 31, 32.
- || Ch. iv. 30, 33.
- § Ch. iii. 6. Compare ch. iv. 30.

Proofs from Revelation, that Miracles

the temple. And he thus farther explains the intention of the miracle to the altonished multitude : "God " has raifed up, and glorified his Son Jefus; and his " name, (or power,) through faith in his name, has " made this man ftrong." The apoftles conftantly declared themselves to be the appointed witneffes of his refurrection and exaltation; and accordingly their miracles are spoken of as the attestation of God to them, in the execution of their commission. " God <sup>se</sup> bore them witnefs, both by figns and wonders, " and with divers miracles and gifts (or diffribu-" tions) of the Holy Ghoft *: they went forth, and " preached every where; the Lord working with " them, and confirming the word with figns follow-" ing +: the Lord gave testimony to the word of his " grace, and granted figns and wonders to be done " by their hands t." St. Paul, in particular, confidered supernatural interpositions in his favour, as manifestations of " the life "" of Christ, " and as a proof of ‡ Acts xiv. 3. By "the word, the word of God, the Gof-"pel, the word of the Gofpel, the word of the kingdom," (which are often uled as fynonimous terms,) the Scripture means the joyful news of the approach or arrival of the Meffiah, and the preaching Jefus to be that very perfon, or the ruler and redeemer of the people of God. Compare Luke iii. 18, 21. ch. viii. 11. ch. ix. 2, 6. Mat. xi. 5. Acts viii. 4. ch. x. 36, 37. ch. xi. 1, 19, 20. ch. xii. 24. ch. xiii. 42-49. ch. xv. 7, 35. ch. xvii. 3, 11, 13. ch. xviii. 4, 11.

|| 2 Cor. iv. 10, 11.

* Heb. ii. 4.'

+ Mark xvi. 20.

argue a divine Interpolition.

of Chrift speaking in him *," and expressly calls his miracles, " the figns of an apostle +." He likewife tells his converts, " that his Gofpel came not unto " them in word only, but also in power, and in the " Holy Ghost, and in much affurance," (or with the fullest-conviction of its truth); " and that his preach-" ing was in demonstration of the Spirit, and of " power, that their faith might not ftand in the wif-" dom of men, but in the power of God ‡." The effect produced by these miracles, corresponds to and confirms the account here given of their primary declared intention: for they demanded and procured an absolute credit to the doctrine and testimony of the performers, " concerning the kingdom of God ||, " and the name of Jefus Chrift §." And St. Paul tells us, that the Gentiles were made obedient to the faith, " through mighty figns and wonders, by the " power of the Spirit of God," and prefented as an acceptable offering to God, " being fanctified by the Holy Ghoft "," imparted to the first Christian converts in many extraordinary gifts.

The

* Ch. xiii. 3.

† Ch. xii. 12. Compare 1 Cor. iv. 19, 20. and what is urged above, ch. 3. fect. 4. p. 213, 214.

‡ 1 Theff. i. 5. 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5.

|| See above, note ‡, p. 266.

§ Acts viii. 6, 7. See ch. ii. 33, 41-43. ch. ix. 35, 42. ch. xiii. 12. Rom. xv. 18.

¶ Rom. xv. 16, 18, 19. It appears from this paffage, that the winning men over to the faith of Christ, was the defign with

Proofs from Revelation, that Miracles

The paffages already cited, chiefly refer to the miracles performed by the apoftles, for the conviction of unbelievers: I will now fet down the paffages which express the intention of those spiritual gifts which the apoftles beftowed upon believers; that we may fee the whole fubject in one view. The gifts conferred upon the Christian converts, befides being a new confirmation of the Christian faith, or of the doctrine and testimony of the apostles concerning Chrift *; were farther defigned as an evidence of the divine favour to all who received and obeyed the Gospel, though they did not submit to the law of Mofes; as a feal of the pardon of their past fins, and a pledge of their adoption to eternal life +; as a proof of their election of God to be his church and people 1; and as a means also of supporting the worship of God, and thereby of promoting the edification and improvement of Christians, as well as the conviction of unbelievers, who might cafually attend the Christian affemblies ||. With regard to the miraculous judgments inflicted upon fuch as wickedly oppofed, corrupted, or difobeyed the Gofpel; they were defigned more immediately for the punifhment and reformation with which the miracles were performed, as well as the effect which they produced.

* 1 Cor. i. 5, 6, 7. 2 Cor. i. 18-22.

+ Acts ii. 38. Rom. v. 1, 5. ch. viii. 14-16. 23. 2 Cor. i. 22. ch. v. 5. Gal. iv. 6, 7. Ephef. i. 13, 14. ch. iv. 30. Compare Luke xx. 36.

‡ 1 Theff. i. 4, 5.

|| I Cor. xii. 7. ch. xiv. 3, 22, 25, 31. Ephef. iv. 8-16,

268

argue a divine Interposition.

tion of offenders *, though they ultimately terminated in the confirmation of the Christian doctrine.

The clear and explicit view, which the foregoing paffages of Scripture give us of the precife intention of the miracles of the New Teftament, may ferve to rectify the miftakes men have run into upon this fubject. In the numerous paffages here cited, the divinity of thefe miracles, confidered in themfelves, is always either expressly afferted, or manifeftly implied; and they are accordingly urged as a decifive and abfolute proof of the divinity of the doctrine and teftimony of their performers, without ever taking into confideration the nature of the doctrine or of the teftimony to be confirmed.

To what is here advanced, fome will object, " that " our Saviour, when the Pharifees afcribed his mi-" racles to a confederacy with demons, appealed to " his doctrine in refutation of the calumny:" " If " Satan caft out Satan, he is divided againft him-" felf; how then fhall his kingdom ftand? And if " I by Beelzebub caft out devils; by whom do your " children caft them out? therefore they fhall be " your judges +." It is fuppofed that our Saviour in this paffage affirms, that it was abfurd to afcribe his miracles to the devil, becaufe his doctrine was moft oppofite to all that an evil fpirit could wifh to be propagated in the world; and that if Chrift was an accomplice

* I Tim. i. 20. Acts xiii. 11. 2 Cor. x. 6. I Cor. v. 5. 2 Cor. xiii. 10.

+ Mat. xii. 26, 27.

269

Proofs from Revelation, that Miracles

270

complice of the devil, then the devil was fubverting his own interests, ruining his own kingdom. This objection, I apprehend, proceeds upon two mistakes.

1st, It supposes, that the Pharifees ascribed the. miracles of Christ in general to a confederacy with demons: a fupposition altogether groundless. It appears from the history *, that this calumny, as it was occasioned by, fo it concerned only, one particular fpecies of his miracles, the cure of demoniacs; whofe diforders were thought to be caufed by the influence of demons; from whence it was concluded, that they might be removed by the influence of demons. There is no intimation given us, that the enemies of Chrift ever extended this reproach to any of his other miracles; faithfully as the evangelists have recorded every other calumny against him, and particular as they have been in their relation of this. And indeed it is certain, that the Pharifees neither did nor could ascribe the miracles of Christ in general to a demoniacal agency. They could not do it; I mean, not without groß felf-contradiction : becaufe they allowed miracles to be a proof of a divine million, upon which alone their religion was founded; and because many of the miracles of Chrift were the very fame with those, which their own prophets had produced as divine credentials. And that they did not afcribe them to demons, appears from their behaviour on fome remarkable occasions. When they were unable to deny ### argue a drvine Interpolition.

* The following are the only infrances of this calumny on record: Mat. ix. 32. ch. xii. 22. Mark iii. 22. Luke xi. 14.

deny the reality of Christ's miracles, at a loss to evade the conviction of them, and fully fenfible of the dangerous confequences to their fuperstition and usurpation, from their gaining credit; in a word, when reduced by them to the utmost perplexity, even then they did not fo much as attempt to argue, that the works of Chrift proceeded from any evil fpirits *, but rather acknowleged God was the author of them. Thus to the man born blind, on whom Christ had bestowed fight, they fay, "Give God the praise: " we know that this man is a finner +." They were willing to allow, that God might exercise his power, and convey his favours by a profligate impostor, rather than that any but God could open the eyes of a perfon born blind. In this fenfe they were underftood by the man on whom they were performed, with whom they were disputing; as appears from his reply, "God heareth not finners ;," cannot confirm by miracles false pretences to a divine commission. It has, I think, been univerfally affirmed, that the Pharifees afcribed Chrift's miracles in general to a confederacy with Satan; though the contrary be fo very evident. How dangerous is it to adopt any opinion, until it has been ftrictly and impartially examined?

2dly, The objection we are confidering farther fuppoles, that our Lord in his reply refers the Pharifees to his doctrine for fatisfaction: whereas there is not

* John xi. 47, 48. ch. xii. 19. Acts iv. 14, 16.

† John i.s. 24.

272 Proofs from Revelation, that Miracles

not one word faid in relation to that, however oppofite it was to the interests of the devil. As the objection referred only to one particular kind of miracles: fo does the answer, which contains an argument in confutation of the objection drawn from the miracle itself. Our Lord is here addreffing himself to thofe, who did not acknowlege, and were unwilling to be convinced of his authority; and therefore argues with them (as he was wont * to do) upon their own principles, in order to filence those whom he could not inftruct +: telling them, " that it was un-" reasonable to impute his cure of demoniacs to the " affistance of the prince of demons; fince, if the " miracle confifted (as they apprehended, and the " objection implied,) in the ejection of demons; it " was in its very nature an act of hoftility against " them; and Satan could not be supposed to affist in " overturning his own empire." With the fame view of exposing the absurdity of this calumny, upon their own principles and pretenfions, he adds, " If " I by Beelzebub caft out demons; by whom do " your children caft them out? therefore they shall " be your judges." By the children of the Pharifees " ŵe.

* Mat. xi. 12, 13. ch. xxv. 24, 25. Luke xviii. 1-7.

+ To the malicious Pharifees, who had been endeavouring to infnare him, Chrift propoles this quefilon, " If David call Chrift Lord, how is he his Son?" Mat. xxii. 45. not for the fake of folving the difficulty, but to leave his enemies fpeechlefs. And when they afked him, " Who gave him his authority?" Mat. xxi. 23; he anfwered this quefilon with another, to filence thole who would not be convinced.

argue a divine Interpolition.

we are to understand their disciples * and followers, or the Jews who undertook + to cast out demons in the name of the God of Abraham, but who certainly did not succeed in their attempts ‡. And our Lord (without either charging their doctrine with ab-S furdity,

• In like manner, by " the fons of the prophets," we are to understand the difciples of the prophets.

+ Acts xiii. 19. That the Jews practifed exorcifms, farther appears from the testimonies of Josephus, Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Theophilus, and Origen, cited by Grotius, Hammond and Whithy on Mat. xii. 27.

t See Middleton's Free Inquiry, p. 84. To what is urged by this excellent writer to difcredit the testimony of the Fathers to the efficacy of the Jewish exorcisms, I would add, that Origen, notwithstanding his allowing to the Jews in his time the power of cafting out devils, declares, " That the Jews, " fince the coming of Christ, are entirely deferted, have no " token of the divine prefence amongst them, have no pro-" phets, no miracles." Contra Celf. 1. 2. p. 62. and 1. 7. p. 337. And Juftin Martyr fpeaks of the prophetic gifts as transferred from the Jews to the Christians. Dial. Tryph. p. 308, 315. Indeed the Jewish exorcisms as described by their own hiftorian (Joseph. Ant. Jud. 1. 8. c. 2. § 5.) are too absurd to be confuted. Accordingly the Jews who had been accustomed to the exorcisms of their countrymen, (in which they made use of magical ceremonies and natural remedies,) when they faw the diforders imputed to demons perfectly and inftaneoully cured by Chrift, were ftruck with the highest aftonishment. Luke xi. 14. Mark i. 26, 28. ch. v. 20. Luke iv. 36, 37. The fight was new, and the miracle carried an immediate conviction of its divinity, " They were amazed at the mighty power of God," Luke ix. 43. and affirm, " It was never so seen in Israel," Mat. ix. 33. compare Mark ii. 12. The feventy disciples triumphed in their cure of demoniacs, as . the furdity, or making any mention of the reafonablenels of his own,) reproaches the manifest inconsistency of their conduct, in imputing his cure of demoniacs to Beelzebub, when they afcribed to God the pretended fuccess of their own exorcisms; and at the fame time taxes them as perfons of the most fhameless disposition, in countenancing the groffest impostures, while they refisted a miracle supported by the clearest evidence. In the fequel of his addrefs to the Pharifees, instead of referring them to his doctrine, he urges the miracle itfelf as a full and decifive proof of his being the Mefliah *; which it could not be, if it could have been performed by those who opposed and blasphemed his character and claims. And when he adds, that the ejection of demons argued a power (not only opposite, but) fuperior + to that of Beelzebub; he still reasons from the nature of the miracle alone, according to their idea of it. He closes his address in the same strain: " If " it be a just maxim, that he is to be regarded as an " enemy, who only refuses his affistance t; will you " account me a friend and confederate with Satan, " who directly oppofe and difpoffels him?"

Proofs from Revelation, that Miracles

274

the moft wonderful and diffinguishing privilege, Luke x. 17. and the people regarded this miracle as the characteristic of the Meffiah, crying out at the fight of it, " Is not this the Son of David ?" Mat. xii. 23. Nay, the Pharifees themfelves were never fo far blinded by malice as to oppose the Jewish exorcisms to Christ's cure of demoniacs: a plain proof that the difference between them was too great to admit of any comparison.

* Mat. xii. 28.

Digitized by Google

‡ V. 30.

As

argue a divine Interpolition.

As there is no proof that our Lord ever did, fo it is utterly impossible that our Lord ever should, refer the Jews to his doctrine, in order to convince them. of the divinity of his works, or to fatisfy them that those works were not performed by the affiftance of -For notwithstanding his miracles, they the devil. difputed his divine miffion and authority, on account of the apprehended abfurdity and impiety of his doctrine, and his extraordinary character and pretenfions as the Son of God. This was the cafe of those who reproached him with blasphemy, when he afferted his commission to forgive fin, though at the fame time he confirmed it by a miracle *; and of those who disparaged his multiplication of the loaves and fishes, because he spoke to them of his sufferings and death +. Indeed the doctrine of his crofs was a ground of general offence both to Jews and Gentiles; and inftead of giving authority to the miracles of the Gofpel, ftood in need of their affistance to procure it a reception. The Pharifees, who (as we have already obferved) could not but allow the divinity of his works, did nevertheless conclude, from his performing them on the Sabbath-day, (and thus fubverting those fuperstitions, which they reverenced as the most effential branches of religion,) that he must needs be a wicked impostor ‡. And the true reason, why our Saviour, during the course of his personal ministry, S 2 did * Mark ii. 7.

Digitized by Google

+ John vi. 30, 31, 41, 60, 66.

‡ John ix. 14, 16.

Proofs from Revelation, that Miracles

did not more clearly and explicitly reveal fome parts of his doctrine, was, that the prejudices of the lews against them were too stubborn to be overcome by the clearest evidence of their divinity *. To have directed them, therefore, to try his miracles by the doctrines they were intended to atteft, would only have fo much the more confirmed them in their difbelief of the Gofpel. Even after the refurrection of Chrift, when the Gofpel was proposed to them by the apoftles in its fullest evidence, and the right of the Gentiles to all the privileges of the Christian church, without fubmitting to the Jewish law, was vindicated by the miraculous donation of the Holy Ghoft to Cornelius and other uncircumcifed Gentiles; yet circumcifion was still infisted upon by many, as a necessary term of Christian communion.

It is to little purpose therefore to plead, as the advocates of Christianity are apt to do, that the nature of the doctrines which miracles are defigned to confirm, will ferve to point out the authors of the works; inasfmuch

* If Chrift had made his doctrine a teft of the divinity of his miracles, it would have been neceffary for him to have revealed his whole doctrine, before he required men to receive him as a divine meffenger on account of his miracles : for how could they judge whether those parts of his doctrine which he had not revealed, were worthy of God or not? Nevertheles long after Chrift had required men to receive him because of his works, he tells his own disciples, "I have yet many things to fay unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." John xvi. 12. Even at this day, no man, on the principle we here oppose, can regard the miracles of Chrift as divine works, unless he be previously affured, that he perfectly understands the whole Chriftian revelation.

276

argue a divine Interpolition.

inafmuch as this can do no fervice to Christianity. For the divinely authorized teachers of it did not, and confidering the prejudices of the first converts, could not, make this use of its doctrines. Had there been any ambiguity in the proof from miracles, it would have been rejected by those to whom it was at first proposed. In latter ages learned men have adventured (fuch is the prefumption and weaknefs of human reason, in many persons endowed with the largest measure of it!) to demonstrate a priori, that it became God to interpole for the reformation of the world, just at the time, and in the manner related in the Gofpel: and hence they infer the divinity of its miracles, and very often even their truth. But it is certain, that in the age in which the Gofpel was published, nothing feemed more incredible, than its grand doctrine, that Jefus of Nazareth is the Meffiah. And Jefus and his apostles won men to the belief of this article, by the evidence of prophecies and miracles, without once appealing to the internal credibility of it, or entering into any metaphylical reasonings and disquisitions concerning the dispensations of providence.

Indeed, fetting all prejudice afide, the Meffiahship of Jefus of Nazareth is a doctrine, which natural reafon cannot, of itself, discover to be either true or false. It is a doctrine which admits of no other proof, than the testimony of prophecies and miracles; and yet can never itself ferve to manifest their divine original *. A late celebrated writer feems to have been S 3 fensible

Digitized by GOOG

* See below, ch. 5.

278 . Proofs from Revelation, that Miracles

fenfible of this when he faid *, that we are " to dif-" tinguish between the doctrines we prove by mira-" cles, and the doctrines by which we try miracles; " and that they are not the fame doctrines." With what a number of fubtle diffinctions have the learned perplexed the evidence of the Gofpel, fuch as render it very unfit for being (what it was, by its gracious author, defigned to be) the religion of the poor and illiterate! If miracles are common to all fuperior beings; is it evident to an ordinary capacity, that they necessarily argue the immediate interpolition of God, when performed by a perfon who teaches leffons of morality; though at the fame time he alleges his miracles, in confirmation of claims and powers quite diffinct from and fuperior to that of a teacher of morality, fuch as his being the Mefliah and Son of God? Befides, if the purity of Christ's moral precepts be a necessary teft of the divinity of his works, wrought to establish his extraordinary pretensions and character; how comes it to pass, that neither Chrift nor his apostles have given us any information concerning this matter? As they have no where told us, what those doctrines are, by which we are to try their miracles; if there be fuch doctrines, are they not chargeable with the most criminal omiffion? an omiffion, which no human wildom or fagacity can fupply. Nay, upon the fole evidence of miracles, they demanded faith in Christ as the Messiah, before they instructed men in any other doctrines; and therefore * Sherlock's Difc. V. 1. p. 303, 304.

argue a divine Interpolition:

therefore certainly without fubmitting them to previous examination: which would have been very unreasonable, if those other doctrines are a necessary test of the divinity of their miracles.

The plain matter of fact, as it appears to me, is this: they never taught men to try their miracles either by the doctrine they were immediately defigned to confirm, or by any other: but, on the contrary, taught men to judge of their doctrine by their miracles. The very purity of the Christian doctrine, as well as the nature of Christ's personal claims, rendered this conduct necessary. The Jews in general, and the Pagans more especially, were plunged into the deepest corruption. The latter were not only idolaters, but worshipped their gods by acts of uncleannefs, fuch as were fuitable to their apprehended na-Would not the purity of the Gofpel create in tures. fuch perfons a prejudice against its miracles *? What could engage them, to embrace a doctrine that contradicted every fentiment and affection of their hearts, but fuch works as were in themfelves, and according to the genuine fentiments of nature, certain and evident proofs of a divine interpolition? Those therefore who endeavour to prove, that miracles alone are not a sufficient criterion of a divine mission; do not attend to the nature of the Christian dispensation, nor to the flate of the world when it was first erected. They likewife impeach the conduct of Chrift and his apostles, and labour to destroy (though without de-S A figning figning it) the very foundation on which Christianity is built. We have shewn in general, that if miracles are ever performed in support of falsehood, they can never afford certain evidence of a divine commission. Least of all, then, can they ferve to establish the divine mission and authority of Christ; which he requires us to acknowlege upon the account of his miracles, as in themselves a compleat and sufficient evidence.

* See above, ch. 2. fect. 5. p. 78-80.

Proofs from Revelation, that Miracles

280

I have now laid before the reader various arguments from revelation, to prove that miracles are the peculiar works of God. Leaving others to judge of the force of those arguments; I shall conclude this chapter with observing, that what has been advanced in it concerning the author of miracles, feems to me to be confirmed by the main doctrines both of the Jewish and Christian revelations. As it is the diftinguishing doctrine of the Old Testament, that Jehovah is the only true God; fo it is the diffinguishing doctrine of the New Testament, that Jesus Christ is the only mediator between God and man. "Though " there be that are called gods, whether in heaven, " or in earth," whether fuperior celestial deities, or inferior terrestrial demons, who are thought to interpofe in human affairs, and to controul the course of events, in a supernatural manner : " but to us there " is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things," who is the fovereign of the whole world; " and one " Lord Jefus Chrift, by whom are all things "," who is * 1 Cor. viii. 4, 5, 6. 1 Tim. ii. 5.

Digitized by Google

argue a divine Interpolition.

is the fole agent between heaven and earth, by whofe ministry God exercises his government over mankind. But if there are any other fuperior beings who can of themselves interpose in our affairs in a supernatural manner, and controul the course of nature, without an immediate commission from God and his Christ; then it is not true, that " there is none other God but one," or that Christ is the only Lord of mankind. As to the former point, there has been occasion to confider it already *: with respect to the latter, St. Paul observes, that it was absurd in Christians, who professed to believe in the one Lord, to have communion with other lords or demons +; his power excluding theirs. He charges the Coloffians " with not holding the head," or with fubverting the authority of Christ, " by the worshipping of angels," though they only afcribed to them a delegated power and authority over mankind. Others, perhaps, may be able to reconcile these fentiments of the apostle with the power of fuperior beings to work miracles; to me they feem to corroborate the other proofs from revelation, that miracles argue a divine interpolition.

* Chap. 3. fect. 5. + 1 Cor. x. 19, 20, 21.

CHAP.

No Instances in Scripture of

CHAP. IV.

SHEWING, THAT THE SCRIPTURES HAVE NOT RE-CORDED ANY INSTANCES OF REAL MIRACLES PERFORMED BY THE DEVIL; IN ANSWER TO THE OBJECTIONS DRAWN FROM THE CASE OF THE MAGICIANS IN EGYPT, FROM THE APPEARANCE OF SAMUEL AFTER HIS DECEASE TO SAUL, AND FROM OUR SAVIOUR'S TEMPTATIONS IN THE WIL-DERNESS.

THE observations contained in the foregoig -chapter, are, I hope, fufficient to shew, that the Scriptures reprefent miracles as works appropriate to God, and never attribute them to any other beings, unlefs when acting by his immediate power and commission. Nevertheless, to all this evidence it is objected, " that the Scriptures cannot confider mira-" cles as the works of God alone; inafmuch as they " relate feveral instances, in which evil fpirits have " actually performed genuine and incontestable mi-" racles, without the order of God, in opposition " to his meffengers, and in fupport of error and " wickednefs. This," it is alleged, " appears with " the clearest evidence, from the works of the ma-" gicians in Egypt; from Samuel's being railed up " by the forcerefs at Endor; and from our Saviour's " temptations in the wilderness by the evil spirit."

But if these narratives establish the actual exercise of a miraculous power by the devil; then the Scriptures grossly contradict themselves, when (as I think, we have already shewn) they deny this power to the devil, and appropriate it to God. But before we charge them with such gross felf-contradiction, we ought to inquire, (if we treat them with the same candour we do other writings,) whether the facts they record, and the doctrine they teach, are not perfectly constiftent. To this end, let us proceed to examine the feveral cases which are appealed to, in support of the devil's power of working miracles. We will begin with confidering

SECT. I.

The Cafe of the Magicians who opposed Moses.

ARIOUS are the accounts, which learned men have given of the works of the magicians in Egypt. Some have fuppofed, that God himfelf empowered the magicians to work true miracles, and gave them an unexpected fuccefs *. But whatever they performed, the hiftory afcribes it, not to God, but to their inchantments. Befides, would it not be injurious to the character of the Deity, to fuppofe that he acted in oppofition to himfelf? Would he * Dr. Fleetwood on miracles, Difc. 1. and Dr. Shuckford's Connexion, V. 2. p. 422. 2d edit.

Digitized by Google

No Inflances in Scripture of

he work fome miracles to confront the authority of Mofes, at the fame time that he was working other miracles to eftablifh it? And how, in this cafe, fhould Pharaoh know, whether it was his duty to difmifs the Ifraelites, or to detain them? Would God, by a miraculous interposition, require him to do, and not to do, the very fame thing?

Others imagine, that the devil affifted the magicians, not in performing true miracles, but in deceiving the fenfes of the fpectators, or in prefenting before them delufive appearances of true miracles. But we have already fhewn * in general, that with regard to the spectators, there is no manner of difference between appearing and real miracles, when the fictions or illusions are not diffinguishable from realities. And if Moles had affirmed the works of the magicians to be diabolical delufions, or mere deceptions of the fight; why might not Pharaoh have affirmed the fame concerning the works of Mofes? If one fide had pretended, for inftance, that the devil fecretly stole away the rods, and substituted ferpents in their stead; the same might have been faid by the other fide: and the trial or competition must have ended in a common diftrust of the senses by both parties, in confusion, or mutual reproaches of fraud and imposition.

The opinion concerning the works of the magicians, which has most generally obtained fince the time of St. Austin, is, that they were not only performed formed by the power of the devil, but were genuine miracles, and real imitations of thole of Moles. This opinion, however, has been rejected by feveral eminent writers, and even by fome very zealous affertors * of the power of fuperior beings to work miracles without the order of God; and who therefore might have acquiefced in the common explication of this hiftory, had they not feen other reafons for departing from it, drawn from the circumstances of the history itself. What I shall attempt to shew, is, that the magicians did not perform works really supernatural, nor were affisted by any superior invisible being. In order to form a right judgment of this fubject, it may not be improper to confider

Digitized by Google

* Ch. 1. fect. 3. p. 30, 31.

I. The character and pretentions of the magicians. It has been already thewn from the teltimony of Heathen writers, that the ancient magicians undertook to explain and to accomplifh things which were deemed far beyond the reach of other mens capacities +. Conformably to this view of them given us by

* This is the cafe with regard to Dr. Sykes in particular. His account of the magicians contains fome excellent obfervations; neverthelefs his zeal to maintain the power of fuperior beings, and even of evil fpirits, to work genuine miracles, prevented him from taking notice of the ftrongeft objections againft the common explication of the performances of the magicians. At the fame time he has given, what I conceive to be, a very falfe account of their character and pretenfions; and left unexplained many circumflances of the hiftory, which are neceffary to the right underftanding of it.

† Ch. 3. fect. 3.

285

No Instances in Scripture of

by Pagan antiquity, we learn from the facred writers, that they were applied to by the kings of Egypt and Babylon to interpret and decypher their dreams*, as well as to difcredit the miracles of Mofes. In the exercife of their art, they relied much on their fuperior knowledge of the fecret powers of nature; yet we are not from hence to infer, with a late learned writer +, that they did not pretend to any commerce with spirits or demons: for the extravagant prodigies they undertook to perform, their ceremonies, supplications and prayers to the gods for aid and fuccefs, demonstrate the contrary §. Magic was indeed an art, and might be learnt, like any other art, from perfons skilful in it; but it was founded on the Pagan fystem of theology, consisted in the practice of the rites of fuperstition, and pretended even to a power of compelling the gods to execute their defires. The appellations by which Mofes describes the magicians, agrees with the account here given of their character and pretenfions. They are called wifemen, forcerers, and magicians ‡. The original word which we rendér

* Gen. xli. 8. Dan. ii. 10, 27. ch. iv. 7. See below, note ‡, p. 288.

† Dr. Sykes on miracles, p. 142. Becaule witchcraft was an art, the doctor concludes that witches did not pretend to receive their power from demons: whereas it was confidered as the art of fetting demons to work.

§ Ch. 3. scct. 3.

‡ " Then Pharaoh also called the wisemen and the forcerers: now the magicians of Egypt, they also did," &c. Exod. vii. 11.

der, magicians, does properly fignify perfons who undertake to explain things obscure and difficult *. It is here used as a general term, and comprehends under it wifemen and forcerers; as is evident from the manner in which they are mentioned ¶. Their being denominated wifemen, denotes their being the profeffors of fcience. With regard to the word we render forcerers +, it is derived from a verb t, which fignifies to use juggling tricks, to delude the fight with false appearances, fo as to make a thing feem otherwife than it is ||; or rather to practife fascination and charms. The word is always joined in Scripture with those which fignify divination, fortune-telling, or revealing fecrets: and it is from the fame root that the words which we render witches and witchcraft are derived §. Dr. Sykes ** and others have taken much fruitlefs pains

* See Le Clerc on Gen. xli. 8. (where the LXX render it by a word that fignifies interpreters,) and compare Dan. v. 11, 12. It is often explained by genethliaci or fapientes nativitatum, and is joined with aftrologers and foothfayers, Dan. i. 20. ch. ii. 10, 27. ch. iv. 7.

¶ See note ‡, p. 286.

|| Vid. Buxtorf & Pagnin. in voc.

§ See Exod. xxii. 18. Deut. xviii. 10. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6. 2 Kings ix. 22. Mic. v. 12. Le Clerc renders the word mecashephim, diviners, Exod. vii. 11. And as these mecashephim (forcerers or diviners) made use of dangerous drugs, and often employed their art in poisoning, the LXX render the word by Φαεμαποί.

** On miracles, p. 166. When this learned writers affirms, , that magic does not feem to be fo old as the days of Mofes in pains to prove, that all the names by which the magicians are defcribed, import only legerdemain; as if they had been jugglers by profeffion, as well as practice. There has been occafion * to obferve, that the Scripture defcribes the Heathen gods, and thofe who pretended to any intercourfe with them, by their ufual appellations. And the names here given the magicians feem to express what they were by profeffion +; they affected the reputation of fuperior knowlege ‡; and pretended both to explain and effect figns, prodigies and wonders, by obferving the rules of their art. Thefe are the perfons who were called in by Pharaoh on the prefent occafion; and we have feen already that the Scripture denies them the ability of difcovering or effecting any thing fupernatural #.

Digitized by Google

No Inflances in Scripture of

II.

Egypt, p. 158; he contradicts both the history before us, and Gen. xli. 8: which agree well with the later accounts of this art; as will appear to any one who compares what occurs here, with what was advanced above, ch. 3. fect. 3.

* P. 253, 274.

+ This is certainly the cafe, as to the two words magicians, and wifemen; and therefore most probably is fo with regard to ' the third, forcerers. And indeed the word itself does more properly import the practice of fascination and charms, than of legerdemain.

‡ In confirmation of what is obferved here and above (ch. 3. fect. 3.) concerning the magicians, I add a paffage from Tacitus, Hift. 1. 4. Ptolomæus omine & miraculo excitus, facerdotibus Egyptiorum, quibus mos talia intelligere, nocturnos vifus aperit.

1 Digitized by Google

H Ch. 3. fect. 3.

II. We are, in the next place, to inquire, with what defign they were fent for by Pharaoh.

To fuppofe that they were fent for, to engage the gods of Egypt to work miracles, in direct opposition to the God of Ifrael; and thereby to invalidate Moses's divine commission; is to contradict the fundamental principles of the Pagan theology, in which the king of Egypt had been educated. Though the Heathen poets do fometimes represent the gods as quarrelling with one another, and taking different fides; fome favouring a particular perfon, others perfecuting him *: nevertheles, the claims of the different deities of the Pagans were fupposed to be confistent with each other +; and their theology, instead of encouraging its votaries, to hope that one deity should protect them from the vengeance, or act in direct defiance of another, rather taught them to appeafe and gain over to their own fide those deities, who were fuppofed to be angry with them, and to protect their enemies t. So that had Pharaoh admitted:

* Ovid. Trift. 1. 1. eleg. 2. v. 4.

+ See above, ch. 3. fect. 5. p. 244.

‡ Cyrus endeavoured to appeale the gods of the countries which he invaded, Xenoph. Cyropæd. 1. 3. The Romans evoked the tutelary gods of the cities they belieged, Macrob. Saturnal. 1. 3. c. 9. Plin. Nat. Hift. 1. 24. c. 17. § 102. Plutarchi Craffum, p. 553. A. The Tyrians, when belieged by Alexander, bound the flatues of Apollo and Hercules, to prevent them from deferting to the enemy, Quintus Curt. 1. 4. c. 3. And the Lacedemonians, during war, played very early in the morning; that being the first folicitors, they might pre-engage

the

Digitized by Google

No Instances in Scripture of ted, that the works of Mofes had been performed by the God of the Hebrews; he would not have applied to the Egyptian deities to oppose his operations and Befides, on the principles of Pagans, who claims *. held the doctrine of local and tutelary deities, the performance of miracles by the gods of one country, would not have destroyed the claims arising from the like miracles performed by the gods of another country. And therefore if Pharzoh confidered the God of Ifrael as a local deity, he would not have thought Mofes's committion from him invalidated by miracles performed by the gods of Egypt. But it is apparent, from the attempts of the magicians, that they did not frive to engage the gods of Egypt to limit, or controul, or in any manner to oppole, the God of Ifrael. For, in this cafe, they would have endeavoured to traverfe and counteract the aim of the adverfe divinity, not to promote it; and would have entreated their gods, not to aggravate and inhance the tremendous effects of Jehovah's displeasure by inflicting like judgments, but to diminish or remove those already inflicted : not to turn more water into blood, for example; but to reftore the corrupted waters to their natutal state: not to multiply frogs, but to remove or destroy the gods in their favour, Xenophon de Laced. Rep. When Balaam was fent for to curse the Israelites, he had no expectation of success, without the permission of their God, Numb. xxiii. 27. Those who conquered any country, adopted the gods of the vanquished people.

Digitized by Google

* See Shuckford, V. 2. p. 406.

deftroy them; efpecially as it was, at leaft, equally éafy to do the latter as the former. Could the deities of Egypt more effectually expose themselves to the teproaches and indignation of their votaries, than by committing acts of hostility against them, instead of protecting or delivering them from the plagues and vengeance of the adverse Divinity? And were the Egyptians likewise so instauated, as to defire the divine guardians of their country, to join with the God of the Hebrews in bringing down more and heavier judgments, and adding to those direful plagues which he had already inflicted? If Pharaoh and his magicians contrived no better for the relief or protection of their country, we may be certain that Egypt, in their days, was not famed for wisdom.

The real state of the case seems to have been, that Mofes having in the name of Jehovah, the God of the universe; who had taken the Hebrews under his peculiar protection, demanded of Pharaoh leave for them to go three days journey into the wilderness, to perform a facrifice; and having at the request of the king of Egypt *[hewn him a miracle**, by turning his rod into a ferpent, in order to authenticate the divinity of his miffion; Pharaoh, notwithstanding this miracle, refused to confent to the demand of Mofes. It is natural to suppose, that a suspicion that the Ifraelites were meditating an escape from that wretched flavery in which they were detained, (which might naturally fpring up in a mind confcious of its own in-T 2 justice justice and oppression.) and the fear of losing to very numerous and valuable a body of flaves, together with all their flocks and herds; would prevent Pharaoh from being forward on this occasion, either to receive or follow conviction. We shall the lefs doubt of this, if we call to mind the pride of princes. (which is not eafily reconciled to a diminution of their grandeur,) or the peculiar rigour of the Egyptian policy, and the altonishing magnificence of their public works *. Pharaoh was, as he told Mofes, a stranger to Jehovah, in whofe name he came : a Deity worfhipped only by his Hebrew flaves, whom he had permitted to groan under the most cruel oppressions, and even amongst them very little, and but lately known. And his character as the God of the universe, the only true God, being fubverfive of the claims of all the Egyptian deities, would at first appear, to one accuftomed to worship a plurality of gods, (many of whom, and particularly the lights of heaven, were thought to exhibit continually the most confpicuous proofs of their divinity,) as the highest absurdity and blasphemy. The Egyptians were early famed for wildom and learning, and more effectially for their knowlege of the nature and worship of the gods; their sentiments on this fubject

Digitized by Google

* Exod. vii. 9.

* The pyramids are a proof of the peculiar turn and genius of the Egyptians to works of magnificence and grandeur; which is also confirmed by the testimony of Diodorus Siculus, 1. I. p. 27. ed. Rhodomani. The Israelites were employed in their public buildings, as appears from Exodus, ch. i. and v. and, no doubt, in many other ways to large a body of people must contribute to the benefit of the state.

fubject feem to have been received with deference and fubmiffion by all the neighbouring nations. At the fame time they exceeded them all in zeal for fuperfitition and idolatry. It must therefore be difficult for us to conceive, what great offence it gave to their pride and bigotry, to be told, that there was no other God but Jehovah, and that the Ifraelites, at that time the most defpicable and wretched part of mankind, were his peculiar people. This was upbraiding Egyptwith ignorance and impiety, as well as with injustice and cruelty.

Nor is it at all unlikely, that Pharaoh might fomewhat doubt at first, whether the miracle which had been wrought for his conviction, did certainly furpass the powers of nature, and the science of magic, and was a proper proof of the fole Divinity of the God of Ifrael. He had never till then feen an example of this kind; nor indeed had fuch wonders, as thole of Moles in Egypt, ever been performed before this time: which might occasion fome hefitation and furprize. The laws of nature in general, and those in particular concerning the generation of animals, the feafons, circumstances and means of their being produced and brought to life, were not fo well underflood, as at prefent. And as they conceived of the whole fystem of nature as animated and divine *, they entertained an extravagant opinion of its hidden powers. Learning was in a few hands; and therefore it was not to eafy to diftinguish what was merely unufual Τ 3

* See above, ch. 3, feet. 2, at the beginning.

Digitized by Google

No Instances in Scripture of

ufual and aftonishing, from what was supernatural. A few ages ago our own countryman, friar Roger Bacon, in virtue of his improvements in natural knowledge, paffed for a conjurer, without having any defign on his part to impose upon the people. The antient magicians studied to raife in others the highest poffible idea of their profession. And it was the received opinion of antiquity, that divination and prodigies (with the last of which Egypt * abounded more than any other country,) were the effect of the natural influence of the elements and planets, and that magicians who dived into the arcana or fecrets of nature, and were masters of their own profession, could regularly bring them to pass, according to the fixed and certain principles of their fcience. In this fcience Mofes himfelf had been instructed. And probably. the first thought of Pharaoh was, that Moses was nothing more than a magician +.

In this view of things, what was more natural than for Pharaoh to fend for his magicians, in order to learn from them, whether the fign given by Mofes was truly fupernatural, or only fuch as their art was able to accomplifh. The nature of their attempts correspond with * Τέραλά τε πλέω σφι εύζηται η τοίσι άλλοισι άπασι αιθρώποισι. Herodot, Euterpe, c. 82.

+ Moles had been brought up in the palace of Pharaoh, and was "learned in all the wildom of the Egyptians," Acts vii, 22; and therefore it was natural to account him a magician. On the very fame grounds, Daniel and the three children were accounted magicians at Babylon, Dan. i. 4, 20. ch. iv. 7-9. ch. v. 11.

Digitized by Google

with this view of Pharaoh in calling them to his affiftance. For they did not undertake to out-do Mofes, or to controul him by superior or opposite acts of power, but barely to imitate him, or to do the fame works with his; which they did with a view to invalidate the argument which he drew from his miracles, in fupport of the fole Divinity of Jehovah, and of his own miffion. And had the magicians fucceeded in their attempt, and, in the exercise of their art, really performed the fame extraordinary acts as Mofes did; it would have followed of courfe, that Mofes, whatever he might pretend, was a magician only * and not an extraordinary divine meffenger; and that Jehovah was not the only fovereign of nature +. It is of the last importance therefore to attend to the true point in question upon this occasion. The question was not, and could not be, " Are the gods of Egypt fu-" perior to the God of Ifrael? or, Can any evil fpi-" rits perform greater miracles than those which Mo-" fes performed by the affiftance of Jehovah?" Every circumstance of the history ferves to shew, that the question was, " Are the works of Moses proper " proofs, that the God of Ifrael is Jehovah, the only f fovereign of nature, and confequently that Mofes T 4 acts * Pliny (in his Nat. Hift. 1. 30. c. 2.) mentions Mofes amongft the most illustrious magicians: which is the highest character under which he could be confidered on the common hypothesis.

+ See ch. 3. fect. 5. p. 227, 245. If the magicians had performed real miracles, the confequences would have been the fame as if Baal had answered by fire. P. 247.

295

" acts by his commission? or, Are they merely the "wonders of nature, and the effects of magic *?" To refolve this question, Pharaoh sent for his magicians; and they by their magical feats undertook to shew, that Moses's works lay within the compass of their art, and therefore could be no proofs of the high claims of the God of Israel, or of Moses's divine commission.

III. But it may be asked, what motives could induce the magicians to make such an attempt, fince notwithstanding Pharaoh might, they could not be ignorant of the extent of their own art? When they were first sent for to court, they as well as Pharaoh might conceive of Moses as nothing more than a magician, like themselves. And though it be too weak an authority for such an ancient fact, yet it may deferve just to be mentioned, on account of the probability of the thing itself, that according to the Talmud, when Moses began to work his miracles, the magicians bantered him, faying, "Thou bringest straw to Affra+," (or, as we should express it, "Thou bringest

* It may be worth observing, that both Philo (de vita Mofis, l. 1. p. 616.) and Josephus (Antiq. Jud. l. 2. c. 13.) place the subject in the same light.

+ The learned authors of the Universal History, though they adopt the common explication of the wonders of the magicians, have taken notice of this Jewith tradition. And they farther observe, that Philo introduces them speaking to Pharaoh and his court, to this purpole, "Why are you affrighten-" ed? We are not ignorant of such things, seeing we profess " the same ourselves." Universal History, v. 3. 8vo. p. 373note E.

Digitized by Google

bringest coals to Newcastle;") meaning that he had judged ill to play his tricks in a country flocked with magicians, who were as well verfed as himfelf in the powers of nature, and in the knowlege of the fecret arts. And it is certain, that they must foon difcover, how reluctant the king was to part with the Ifraelites, and therefore how acceptable to him it would be, fhould they by their skill and dexterity be able to imitate, and thereby to difcredit the miracles of Mofes. And by a mind prejudiced as his was, they well knew, that mere cavils, and the most barefaced fophiltry are often effeemed a fufficient confutation of the most conclusive arguments. Besides, the king, refolutely determined not to hearken to Mofes, might be fo unreasonable as to require that of his magicians which was beyond their power*; by which they might be tempted to have recourse to artifice, to fcreen themselves from his vengeance. And their concern at all times, from motives of pride and ambition +, to raife the reputation of their art to an extravagant height, continually prompted them to have recourfe to fallacy to support it. And this extravagance of their pretentions gave fome colour to the refentment of princes, when their boafted enterprizes failed in * See Dan. ii. 1-13. The prophets of Baal likewife, I Kings xviii. 24. made an experiment, without any well-grounded expectation of fucces, because the people approved of Elijah's proposal.

+ Strabo (Geogr. 1. 1.) tells us, " that the priefts of Egypt, " the Chaldeans and magi obtained great honour and pre-emi-" nence, because they excelled in all kinds of knowlege."

297

No Instances in Scripture of

in the execution. In the cafe before us, the magicians of Egypt were under every temptation to encounter Mofes at all hazards, and if poffible to fupply by collution their defect of power. And they might the more eafily hope for fuccels and applaule, or at leaft to avoid difgrace and detection, as they knew the whole court as well as the king would be forward to avail themfelves of the appearance not only of equality, but of any refemblance between their performances and those of Mofes. From this reprefentation of the motives and aims of the magi, let us now proceed to confider those of Mofes.

IV. If we examine the principles and conduct of Mofes, we shall foon be fensible, that he could not allow the magicians performed real miracles. For

1. We have already proved, that the Scriptures ever reprefent the whole body of magicians as impoftors *, who were incapable of fupporting their pretentions by any works or predictions beyond human power and fkill.

2. It has been alfo fhewn +, that all the facred writers, and Mofes in particular, reprefent all the Heathen deities (on the belief of whofe existence and influence the  $\ddagger$  magic art was founded) as unsupported by any invisible spirits, and in themselves utterly impotent and sense is and certainly therefore incapable of imitating the stupendous miracles of Moses.

3. This

Digitized by Google

* Ch. 3. fect. 3. p. 182.

+ Ch. 3. fect. 3. p. 156, 157.

‡ Ch. 3. fect. 2. p. 178.

3. This divine prophet farther taught, that the God of Ifrael was Jehovah, who alone created the world by his power, and ruled it continually by his providence *. His religion was built on the unity and fole dominion of God, as its foundation. And the point which Mofes at this very time was about to establish, was, the fole Divinity of Jehovah +, in direct opposition to the principles of idolatry, and confequently with a view of exposing the absolute nullity of all the Heathen gods; the claims of the former being fubverfive of those of the latter. If Moses therefore allowed, that the Heathen idols (or, which we have fhewn to be the fame thing, any evil fpirits ‡ fupporting their caufe) enabled the magicians " to " turn rods into ferpents, and water into blood, and " to create frogs "," and confequently any other fpecies of animals, which require only equal skill and power; he contradicts the great defign of his miffion; and overturns the whole fabric of his religion. For on the fuppofition here made, the Heathen deities are not mere nullities, and Jehovah is not God alone.

* Ch. 3. fect. 5. p. 228.

+ Ch. 3. fect. 5. p. 232, 236.

‡ Ch. 3. fect. 2. p. 162.

|| I might have added, that the advocates of the common hypothefis (in effect) allow, that those invisible beings who supported the magicians, had a power of turning dust into lice, when they ascribe their not doing it, to their being restrained by God.

Digitized by Google

No Instances in Scripture of

alone. Whatever beings are able to create feveral different species of animals, and to multiply them at pleasure, (and hereby to destroy the wife economy of the animal world,) and to change the inmost nature both of inanimate fubstances, and of living beings; whether we will allow fuch beings the name of God or not, they certainly poffess in a very high degree those powers, which, according to the united testimony of reason and revelation, are the appropriate and diftinguishing glories of the one true God. If the bringing things into existence, be no test of a divine interpolition, to what more authentic test can we appeal? The creation of beings endued with life, does . more especially seem to be a branch of the divine prerogative *; the lowest degrees of animal life having an excellence and dignity fuperior to all the glories of inanimate nature t. Such a creating power, and

* A creating power is represented in Scripture as a divine prerogative, If. xliv. 24. and as the foundation of the worship which God claims from mankind, Jerem. v. 22. "His glory he will not give to another." If. xlii. 8. ch. xlviii. 11.

+ What bishop Sherlock affirms concerning the miracles of Moses, (V. 1. p. 283.) would be true also of the works of the magicians, had they been, as he suppose, real miracles: "They "were so near akin to the works of creation, that by a just "comparison they might be known to come from the same au-"thor." Or rather, fince works of creation were performed by opposite invisible powers; it would follow of course, that there was a plurality of creators; and therefore of rival Gods. See above, ch. 2. sect. 4. Were the common account of the magicians true; their works must necessarily have been confidered by Pharaoh as a full demonstration of the existence and power and fuch a fovereignty over nature, as the Heathen deities are here fuppofed to have difplayed, muft make it difficult, if not impoffible, to determine, what parts of the creation, and what events of providence are to be afcribed to God alone. Who can tell how far the power of evil fpirits may extend on other occafions, when uncontrouled by God; if they were capable even of oppofing and contravening, in fuch an aftonifhing degree, his operations and defigns, at the very time he was publicly afferting his own peculiar honours *?

4. Mofes appropriates all miracles to God, and urges his own as an abfolute and authentic proof, both of the fole Divinity of Jehovah, and of his own miffion +: which he could not juftly do, if his oppofers performed miracles, and even the very fame with his. But here it is alleged, notwithftanding we fhould admit that the magicians wrought real miracles, yet that in the iffue it appeared, Mofes was fupported by the true God; becaufe he performed more and power of his own gods, and as a fuller vindication of their worthip (at leaft of a fubordinate worthip,) than the Pagam priefthood ever produced.

* It is the more incredible, that God fhould now fuffer any evil fpirit to work miracles in opposition to himfelf; as this was the firft time of interposing in a miraculous manner, for the conviction of the world, and no such miracles were performed in any subsequent contest between him and the idol gods. I Kings xviii.

f See the paffages cited above, ch. 3. fact. 5. p. 236. fect.
6. p. 249. and below, p. 304-307.

No Inftances in Scripture of and greater miracles than his oppofers. " The mira-" cles performed by the magicians in Egypt," (fays an able and eloquent writer *.) " were so far from " leffening the authority of the works done by Mo-" fes, that they added to it : For, the greater the " powers were which God humbled and fubdued, " the greater evidence did he give of his own fupe-" riority." Many other learned writers have likewife pleaded, that the miracles opposed by the idolatrous magicians to those of Moses, the prophet of God, ferved only to fet off the divine power to the greatest advantage. But I can not perfuade myself, that the power of God appears to any, much lefs to the best advantage; but when it performs works peculiar to itfelf, fuch as no creatures are able to imitate; and carries the divine defigns into execution, without any controul. The juperiority however of the true God to the Heathen deities, was not the point in question. What Mofes proposed to prove, was, that Jehovah was God alone, and that there was none befides him, and confequently that the Heathen gods were mere nullities. Now, if in their names very great miracles were performed by the magicians, and still greater by Mofes in the name of Jehovah; though we may allow that hereby Jehovah proved himfelf fuperior + to # * Bishop Sherlock, in his Discourses, V. 1. p. 285.

+ It was shewn above, ch. 2. sect. 6. p. 83, that in the cafe of such a contest as is here supposed, between two opposite parties working miracles for victory; though he who exerts greater acts of power than his opponent, may be allowed to possed to the Heathen gods; yet this fuperiority to them will not prove that he is God alone, and that the Heathen gods were nullities, defiitute of that very power which they visibly exerted. " The greater " the powers were which God humbled and fubdu-" ed;" with fo much the lefs truth could they be represented as impotent and fenfeless idols. Had Mofes, while he allowed to the gods of Egypt a creating power, (or what feems very nearly to approach it;) attempted nothing more than to prove the fuperiority of the God of Israel; this would rather have establifhed than over-turned the Pagan fystem, which was built upon a belief of gods of different orders. who possessed various degrees of excellence and power.

But a cafe fo very abfurd, as that of two opposite parties working miracles for victory, would never have been put, had the defenders of revelation more carefully attended to the flate of the controverfy* between the prophets of God, and the antient idokaters. And were it true in general, that in cafe of a conteft between two parties performing real miracles, he who does the most and greatest is fent of God; yet this would be of no fervice to the cause of Mofes; because he places the truth of his mission on a different footing. Moses certainly best understood the evidence arising from his own miracles; and it is impossible poffels greater degrees of power; yet it will not follow from hence, that he is affilted by the Divine power.

Digitized by Google

* Ch. 3. fect. 5. p. 243.

No Inflances in Scripture of impoffible to make a just vindication of them, unlefs we vindicate the ufe to which he applies them. Now Mofes never alleges in his own favour, that on the whole he performed more and greater miracles, than his oppofers *. He urges his miracles in an abfolute, not in a comparative view, as full proofs of his miffion from Jehovah: which he could not justly have done, at least with regard to those miracles which were performed both by him, and his rivals, had there been any fuch. This will more fully appear under the next head, where we shall show, that

5. Moles not only urges his miracles in general, but even each individual miracle apart, as a compleat proof both of the Divinity of Jehovah, and his own With regard to his first miracle, the transmillion. formation of his rod into a serpent, he was directed by God to perform and propole it both to the Ifraelites and Egyptians as a lign +, furely not as a doubtful and fallacious, but as a certain and demonstrative, fign of his miffion from Jehovah, the God of the Hebrews; without taking into confideration any fupposed superiority he was afterwards to acquire. Yet how was the transformation of his rod a demonstration of his being fent by Jehovah, if the magicians produced

* Nor do any of the prophets of God ever plead the fuperiority of their miracles, either in respect of number or excellence, to those of their opposers; neceffary as such a plea would have been, in case their opposers had performed real miracles. These divine messengers appeal to their works, as being in themselves, and separately confidered, signs of a divine mission.

Digitized by Google

+ Exod. iv. 1-5. ch. vii. 8, 9.

produced the very fame credentials, to fhew the falfehood of his commission? Nay, the magicians, in the first contest, if they performed real miracles, not only imitated, but exceeded Mofes; having the advantage over him in the number of their miracles. For they turned not only one rod into a ferpent, which was all Moles had hitherto done; but they turned their feveral rods into ferpents. Now, why is Mofes to be credited on account of a fingle miracle, if it be contradicted and overborne by feveral miracles, fully equal to it ? Befides, with respect to the Israelites, they had not only been instructed to receive, but had actually received, Mofes as a meffenger from Jehovah, the God of their fathers *, upon the evidence of the miraculous conversion of his rod into a fer-What doubts then, nay, what fhame on acpent. count of their own credulity, and what indignation against Moses, must they have felt, when they faw this evidence overturned and destroyed, which Mofes had proposed, and they had admitted, as valid in itfelf, without the aid of any farther miracle? Afterwards, it is true, Mofes's ferpent fwallowed up those of the magicians: but this after-victory, however fplendid, could not retrieve the credit of the former defeat; it could not establish the validity of the proof, from the change of his rod, which he had appealed to in the beginning, as a decifive teltimony in his favour: but which was entirely deftroyed by the magicians changing their rods into ferpents. In like manner

U

Exod. iv. 1-5.

No Instances in Scripture of

ner, concerning the first miraculous plague; Moses was commanded to fay to Pharaoh, in the name of God, " IN THIS thou shalt know that I am Jeho-" vah: behold, I will smite with the rod that is in " mine hand, upon the waters which are in the ri-" ver, and they shall be turned into blood *." Now, if the magicians afterwards performed the very same + kind * Exod. vii. 17. See above, p. 237, note ‡, where other examples are produced, to shew what use Moses makes of each individual miracle.

+ I allow indeed, that, on the common hypothesis, the miracles of turning water into blood, and bringing up frogs, as performed by the magicians, were not fo extensive, as the same miracles when performed by Moles. But, on that hypothefis, the reason might be, that when the magicians undertook these miracles, it was impossible to carry them to the fame extent; the waters of Egypt being previously converted into blood, and the country covered with frogs, by Moles. And to this caule, rather than to any defect of power in the magicians, the Egyptians would naturally afcribe the difference between their works and those of Moses, if the former had been real miracles. In cafe you allow the magicians a miraculous power of turning water into blood, how will you fnew, that they did not exert it, as far as the fearcity of water would permit, and therefore as far as it could have been exerted by Mofes himfelf, had he been in their fituation? Why then should it be taken for granted, by the advocates of the common hypothesis, that, when the magicians had (it is supposed) turned a certain quantity of water into blood, their power was limited to that particular quantity, and could extend no forther; inafmuch as the hiftory contains an obvious reason for their not turning more water into. blood, there being very little water on which the experiment could be made? When Chrift converted into wine, the water in fix veffels; did he not hereby give proof of a power, which could.

kind of miracle; it was no more a proof that the God of the Hebrews was Jehovah, than that one of the Egyptian idols was Jehovah. With what truth then could it be affirmed to Pharaoh, "By this mira-" cle, the diffinguishing character of the true God " fhall be fully made known and displayed?" Had U 2 Moses could have produced the fame change in a much larger quantity? The limits of the miracle were determined by the occafion and circumftances of it, and do not create the leaft prefumption of any defect of power. I add, that if this miracle of Chrift was in itself a proof of a divine interpofition; why do men deny the divinity of the fimilar miracle, which they afcribe to the magicians? From the mere nature of the work itfelf, no argument can be drawn to its disadvantage. It was indeed less extensive, than the corresponding miracle of Moles; but we have accounted for this difference. Befides, in miracles of the fame kind, can the abettors of the common hypothesis determine on their own principles, how far the power of the devil reaches, and where the power of God begins? Were we to allow them, that whenever one miracle exceeds another in extent, the most extensive miracle must necessarily proceed from a being of the most extensive power; this would not prove Its divinity, as was shewn above, ch. 2. fect. 6. Nor did Moses ever reft his miffion, on his miracles being more extensive, than the supposed miracles of the magicians. Nay, God himself fays to Mofes, Exod. iv. 9. " If they will not believe even thefe two figns," (the turning the rod of Mofes into a ferpent, and the ferpent into a rod again, and the making his hand leprous and found.) " thou shalt take of the water of the river, and " pour it upon the dry land, and the water which thou takest " out of the river, fhall become blood upon the dry land." Here the quantity of water could not be confiderable; neverthelefs, the conversion of it into blood is proposed as a certain fign of Mofes's divine million.

307

· No Instances in Scripture of

Moles on this occasion referred the king for conviction to his fubfequent miracles: this new evidence, however forcible, could not have refcued him from the just reproach of having before offered (and by a pretended command of God) fuch as was futile and fallacious, and of still claiming a title to a divine legation, which, on the iffue he had put it, had been already decided against him. Though we should allow Mofes but the common diferetion of a man, and deny him the divine guidance of a prophet of God; we cannot suppose him guilty of so weak a conduct as this; which must have funk the Israelites into despondency, afforded the Egyptians just occasion of triumph, and fully vindicated Pharaoh in treating Mofes as an impostor, who had offered falle tests of a divine agency and miffion. Our learned divines would never have fuppofed, that Mofes believed the magicians performed real miracles, and the fame with his own; had they confidered the ufe which this divine prophet makes of each diffinct and particular miracle which he performed.

6. The abfurdity of fuppoling that Moles allows the magicians the credit of real miracles, will appear in a ftill ftronger light, if we recollect the order of time, in which their fuppoled miracles, and thole of Moles, were performed. Dr. Clarke*, after most other writers, feems to have inverted the true order of time, when he places the miracles of the magicians first: " The magicians worked feveral miracles to " prove

> . Digitized by Google

* Vol. 2. p. 700. fol.

" prove Mofes an impostor, and not fent of God; " Moles, to prove his divine commission, worked mi-" racles more and greater than theirs." But, according to the history, Moses first of all turns his rod into a ferpent; and thereby, according to his own and our representation, fully establishes his divine mission. Immediately after, his oppofers deftroy the force of that evidence to which he had appealed, by producing (according to the common hypothesis) the very fame evidence, and in a more perfect degree, to prove him an impostor. In the next place, Jehovah interposes to recover the loft credit of his meffenger, and the ferpent of Moles fwallows up those of the magicians. But the fpectators might justly doubt, whether one ferpent's eating another was a greater miracle, than the turning feveral rods into fo many ferpents; and therefore must remain in suspence on which fide the fuperiority lay. However that might be, Jehovah a third time engages to evince his own Divinity, and the authority of his ambaffador, by turning the waters of Nile into blood. But now the evil fpirit (according to the commonly received account of this matter) interpofes in his turn, and by rivalling the operations of Jehovah, defeats his intention, and expofes the infufficiency of the means used to accomplish it; and hereby gains a temporary triumph over the professed sovereign of the universe. God interpofes again, and with the fame view as before, and brings frogs upon the land of Egypt. But his intentions are again frustrated by Satan, who performed the fame atchievement, to convince the world that that U 3

Digitized by Google

that work had been fallely arrogated by God as his fole prerogative. Thus (according to the prevailing hypothefis) were the claims of Jehovah and Moles on the one hand, and of the magicians and the devil on the other, alternately established and destroyed; the fuperiority of power appearing on both fides at different times: nay, hitherto more frequently, and indeed more incontestably belonging to the devil, than to God; inafmuch as it was not Jehovah who controuled the supposed miracles of the devil, (one inftance alone excepted,) but the devil who controuled the miracles of Jehovah. The abettors of the common hypothefis are concerned to fhew, that their account of this contest, if traced into its genuine confequences, is not big with impiety, and the most difhonourable apprehensions of the bleffed God. Can they deliberately perfuade themfelves, that the almighty fovereign of nature would engage in an open conteft for fupremacy with the devil? and that he would fuffer him to appear on fome occafions as his rival, and even as his superior, capable of frustrating his great defigns, invalidating the proofs he thought fit to give of his universal dominion, and hereby rendering him contemptible in the eyes of the Ifraelites and Egyptians? 'Or, could his claim to be Jehovah, and the only fovereign of nature, be both true and falfe? For these reasons, (and feveral others which will occur in the fequel,) Mofes could not reprefent the magicians as performing real miracles.

V. Here perhaps it may be objected, that Mofes defcribes the works of the magicians in the very fame language language as he does his own *; and therefore that there is reason to conclude, that they were equally miraculous. To which 1 answer,

1. That nothing is more common, than to fpeak of profeffed jugglers as doing, what they pretend and appear to do +; and that this language never mifleads us, when we reflect what fort of men are fpoken of, namely, mere impofers on the fight. Why might not Mofes then ufe the common popular language, when fpeaking of the magicians, without any danger of mifconftruction; inafmuch as the fubject he was treating, all the circumftances of the narrative, and the opinion which the hiftorian was known to entertain of the inefficacy and impofture of magic, did all concur to prevent miftakes?

2. Moles does not affirm, that there was a perfect U 4 conformity

* "The magicians of Egypt alfo did in like manner with "their inchantments. For they caft down every man his rod, "and they became ferpents." Exod. vii. 11, 12. After Aaron had turned all the waters of Egypt into blood, it is faid, "The magicians did fo with their inchantments," v. 22. And again it is faid, "The magicians did fo with their inchant-"ments, and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt," ch. viii. 7.

+ When Mofes defcribes what the magicians pretended and feemed to perform by faying, "They caft down every man his "rod, and they became ferpents, and they brought up frogs " upon the land of Egypt;" he only ufes the fame language as Apuleius, (Metam. l. 1.) when defcribing a perfon who merely played juggling tricks, Circulatorem afpexi equeftrem spatham præacutam mucrone infefto devoraffe : ac mox eundem,-venatoriam lanceam,-in ima vifcera condidiffe.

Digitized by Google

No Instances in Scripture of conformity between his works and those of the magicians. He does not close the respective relations of his own particular miracles with faying, The magicians did " that thing "," or, " According to what he did, fo did they +;" (a form of speech used on this occasion, no less than three times in one chapter, to defcribe the exact correspondence between the orders of God, and the behaviour of his fervants): but makes choice of a word of great latitude, fuch as does not neceffarily express any thing more than a general fimilitude, fuch as is confiftent with a difference in many important refpects: They did fo, or in like manner, as he had done. That a perfect imitation of Mofes could not be defigned by this word, is evident from its being applied to cafes, in which fuch an'imitation was absolutely impracticable: for when Aaron had converted all the waters of Egypt into blood ‡, we are told, " the magicians did fo," that is, fomething in like fort. Nor can it be fuppofed, that they covered the land of Egypt with frogs; as will be fhewn below. Nay, the word imports nothing more, than their attempting fome imitation of Mofes: for it is used when they failed in their attempt. " They did SO-----to bring forth lice, but " they could not ||."

3. Sa

- * As in Exod. ix. 5, 6.
- + Ch. vii. 6, 10. 20.
- ‡ Exod. vii. 20-25.

|| Ch. viii. 18. 'Le Clerc observes, Nec raro Hebræi, ad conatum notandum, verbis utuntur quæ rem effectern fignificant.

3. So far is Moles from alcribing the tricks of the magicians to the invocation and power of demons, or to any fuperior beings whatever; that he does most expressly refer all they did or attempted in imitation of himfelf, "to human artifice and imposture." The original words which are translated inchantments *, are entirely different from that rendered inchantments in other passages of Scripture, and do not carry in them any fort of reference to forcery, or magic, or the interposition of any spiritual agents. They import deception and concealment, and ought to have been rendered, fecret fleights or jugglings; and are thus translated even by those who adopt the common hypothesis cant. Gen. xxxvii, 21. Confult him likewise on Exod. viii. 18. ch. xii. 48. Pf. 1xvi. 2.

* The original word used Exod. vii. 11. is belahatehem; and that which occurs, ch. vii. 22. and ch. viii. 7, 18. is belatehem. The former is probably derived from lahat, which fignifies ' to burn,' and the fubstantive ' a flame,' or ' fhining fword-blade;' and is applied to ' the flaming fword' which guarded the tree of life. Gen. iii. 24. Those who formerly uled legerdemain dazzled and deceived the fight of the spectators by the art of brandishing their swords, and sometimes feemed to eat them, and to thrust them into their bodies. And the expression feems to intimate, that the magicians appearing to turn their rods into ferpents, was owing to their eluding the eyes of the fpectators by a dextrous management of their fwords. In the fucceeding inftances they made use of fome different contrivance : for the latter word belatehem comes from a word fignifying ' to cover' or ' hide,' (which fome think the former word also does;) and therefore fitly expresses any fecret artifices or methods of deception, whereby falfe appearances are imposed upon the spectators.

No Inflances in Scripture of

hypothesis with regard to the magicians *. These fecret fleights and jugglings, are expressly referred to the magicians, not to the devil, who is not fo much as mentioned in the hiftory. Should we therefore be asked +, How it came to pass, in case the works of the magicians were performed by fleight of hand, that Mofes has given no hint thereof? We answer, he has not contented himfelf with a hint of this kind : but, at the fame time that he afcribes his own miracles to Jehovah, has in the most direct terms refolved every thing done in imitation of them entirely to the fraudulent contrivances of his oppofers, to legerdemain or fleight of hand, in contradiftinction from magical incantations. Mofes therefore could not defign to reprefent their works as real miracles, at the yery time he was branding them as impostures.

VI. It remains only to fhew, that the works performed by the magicians, did not exceed the caufe to which they are afcribed; or, in other words, the magicians proceeded no farther in imitation of Mofes, than buman artifice might enable them to go; (while the miracles of Mofes were not liable to the fame impeachment, and bore upon themfelves the plaineft fignatures of that divine power to which they are referred.) If this can be proved, the interpofition of the devil on this occafion, will appear to be an hypothefis invented without any kind of neceffity, * Bishop Kidder on Exod. vii. 11.

+ As we are by Dr. Macknight, in his Truth of the Gofpel Hift. p. 372.

Digitized by Google

as it certainly is without any authority from the far cred text.

1. With regard to the first attempt of the magicians, the turning rods into ferpents; it cannot be accounted extraordinary, that they should feem to fucceed in it, when we confider that these men were famous for the art of dazzling and deceiving the fight; and that ferpents, being first rendered tractable and harmless *, as they eafily may, have had a thousand different tricks played with them, to the astonishment of the spectators. Huetius + tells us, that amongst the Chinese there are jugglers who undertake to turn rods into ferpents; though, no doubt, they only dextroufly fubfitute the latter in the room of the former. Now, this is the very trick the magicians played : and it appears by facts, that the thing in general is very practicable. It is immaterial to account particularly, how the thing was done:

* Thole who defire to fee inftances of this from modern authors, may confult Dr. Sykes on miracles, p. 166-168. Many pretended to render ferpents harmless by charms, (Pf. lviii. 5. Bochart. Hieroz. Part. post. 1. 3. c. 6. Shaw's travels, preface, p. 5. travels, p. 429. supplement, p. 62.) though more probably they destroyed the teeth through which they ejected their poston. Herodotus mentions certain ferpents which were quite harmless, anequive idama dontaness, Euterpe, c. 74. Antiquity attributed to the Pfylli, a people of Africa, the extraordinary virtue of rendering themselves invulnerable by ferpents, as well as of curing those who were bit by them. See Dr. Hasselquist's voyages and travels, cited in the Monthly Review for February 1766, p. 133.

+ Alnetan. Quæst. 1. 2. p. 155.

No Inflances in Scripture of

done; fince it is not always eafy to explain in what manner a common juggler impofes upon our fight, Should it be fuggested, that Moles might impose upon the fight of the spectators as well as the magicians; I answer, that as he ascribes their performances to legerdemain, and his own to God; fo there might, and mußt have been a wide difference in their manner of acting; the covered arts of the magicians not being used by Moles, the fame fufpicion could not reft on him as did on them. What an ingenious writer afferts is not true, that according to the Exodus, the outward appearance on both fides was precifely the fame: for the book of Exodus specifies a most important difference between the miracle of Aaron, and the impollures of the magicians. For it fays, that " Aaron' caft down his rod, before Pha-" raoh, and before his fervants, and it became a fer-" pent." But with regard to the magicians it uses very different language; for at the fame time it fays, " They cast down every man his rod, and they be-" came ferpents," it expressly declares that they did this by their " inchantments, or covered arts." And what in the most effectual manner prevented any apprehension, that the ferpent of Aaron was (like those of the magicians) the effect only of a dextrous management, not a miraculous production; God caufed his rod to fwallow up theirs: in which there was no room for artifice, and which, for this reason, the magicians did not attempt to imitate. This new miracle was not defigned to establish the superiority of the God of Ifrael to the idols of Egypt; nor was it capable capable of anfwering that end *: but in the view here given of it, had much wifdom, by vindicating the credit of the former miracle +, (which might poffibly be more open to fufpicion, than any of the reft,) as well as by affording new evidence of a divine interpofition in favour of Mofes. God confidered this evidence as fully decifive of the point in queftion between his meffengers and the magicians: for from this

316,

317

* It was obferved above, p. 309. that it is far from being evident, that the caufing one ferpent to fwallow feveral, is a greater miracle than the actual creation of a number equal to those fwallowed.

+ We learn from hence, how little occasion there was for Moles, to detect the artifices of the magicians; who did not fo much as pretend to any peculiar divine affiftance, and who funk into contempt of themselves. 2 Tim. iii. 9. The nature of the works of Moses, and the open unsuspicious manner of their performance, ferved fufficiently to difgrace the attempts of his rivals.---On the other hand, it is an infuperable difficulty attending the common hypothefis, that Mofes never intimated to Pharaoh, or the Egyptians, that the magicians performed their works by the affiftance of the devil, (as without doubt he would have done, if that had been the cafe;) nor taught them to diffinguish between diabolical and divine miracles; though on the common hypothesis both appeared in feveral inftances to be the very fame. If the devil performed real miracles in fupport of the magicians; it was the more neceffary that Moles should have given express notice of this, both to the Israelites and Egyptians; as the latter certainly had no fufpicion of this kind, and neither could learn any thing concerning the miraculous power of the devil, but by revelation. Moles, however, instead of revealing this fecret. has, (by deferibing his rivals as magicians, and their works as impostures,) in effect, denied their being assisted by the devil.

No Inflances in Scripture of

this time he proceeded to the punifloment of Pharaoh and the Egyptians: which affords a new demonstration, drawn from the justice of the divine Being, of the falsehood of the common hypothesis, according to the representation given of it by those, who maintain, that the magicians were not plainly vanquished, till they were restrained from turning the dust into lice *. Had this been the case, it would have been right in Pharaoh to suspend his judgment till that time; nor would God have punished him by the two intervening plagues, that of turning the waters of the Nile (to which Egypt owed its fecundity) into blood, and covering the land with frogs: punishments fo severe, as to imply the most criminal obstinacy on the part of Pharaoh.

2. With regard to the next attémpt of the magicians

* According to Mr. Hallet, (on miracles, p. 26, 34, 35.) the works of the magicians were real miracles, such as argued the interpolition of oppolite invilible powers to those by which Moles was affilted; the three first miracles of Moles did not appear to require more ftrength for their performance, than those of the magicians; and the spectators were in suspence which fide gained the victory, till the magicians were prevented from turning the dust of the land into lice. Archbishop Tillotion alfo, (on 1 John iv. 1. V. 1. p. 179. fol. ed.) after a thousand other writers of inferior note, supposes the evidence till then to be equal on both fides. But, is it poffible, . that the righteous judge of the world should punish Pharaoh for not complying with his orders, before he had given him clear evidence that those orders came from him, and while he could not but doubt whether they did come from him; if the being left in doubt did not itself create a suspicion, that they could not come from him?

cians to imitate Mofes, who had already turned all the running and standing waters of Egypt into blood *, there is no difficulty in accounting for their fuccess, in the degree in which they fucceeded. For it was during the continuance of this judgment, when no water could be procured, but by digging round about the river +, that the magicians attempted, by fome proper preparation, to change the colour of the fmall quantity that was brought them; (probably endeavouring to perfuade Pharaoh, that they could as eafily have turned a larger quantity into blood.) In a cafe of this nature, imposture might, and, as we learn from history, often did, take place. It is related by Valerius Maximus 1, that the wine poured into the cup of Xerxes was three times changed into blood. But fuch trifling feats as these could not at all disparage the miracle of Moses; the vast extent of which raifed it above the fuspicion of fraud, and ftamped upon every heart, that was not fteeled against all conviction, the strongest impression of its divinity. For he turned their streams, rivers, ponds, and the water in all their receptacles, into blood. And the fish that was in the river (Nile) died, and the river ftank ||.

3. Pharaoh not yielding to this evidence, God proceeded to farther punifhments, and covered the whole land of Egypt with frogs. Before these frogs were * Exod. vii. 20-25. + V. 24.

Digitized by Google

‡ L. i. с. б.

|| Exod. viii. 1-7.

. 319

No Inflances in Scripture of

were removed *, the magicians undertook to bring (into fome place cleared for the purpose) a fresh supply: which they might eafily do, when there was fuch plenty every where at hand. Here also the narrow compass of the work exposed it to the sufficien of being effected by human art; to which the miracle of Mofes was not liable; the infinite number of frogs which filled the whole kingdom of Egypt, (fo that their ovens, beds, and tables fwarmed with them,) being a proof of their immediate miraculous production. Befides, the magicians were unable to procure their removal +, which was accomplished by Mofes, at the fubmiflive application of Pharaoh, and at the very time that Pharaoh himself chose; the more clearly to convince him, that God was the author of these miraculous judgments, and that their infliction or removal did not depend upon the influence of the elements or stars, at fet times, or in critical junctures.

4. The hiftory of the last attempt of the magicians, confirms the account here given of all their former ones. Mofes turned all the dust of the land into lice: and this plague, like the two preceding ones, being inflicted at the word of Moses, and extended over the whole kingdom of Egypt, must neceffarily * Exod. viii. 6, 7, 8. Nor indeed can it be imagined, that after this or the former plague had been removed, that Pharaoh would order his magicians to renew either.

+ Ch. viii. 8. Had they been able to inflict this plague miraculoufly, they might have removed it in the fame manner.

Digitized by GOOG

seeffarily have been owing, not to human art, but to .a divine power. Neverthelefs, the motives upon which the magicians at first engaged in the contest with Moles, the shame of defisting, and some slight .appearances of fuccels in their former attempts, prompted them still to carry on the imposture, and .to try " with their inchantments to bring forth lice : " but they could not "." With all their skill in magic, and with all their dexterity in deceiving the fpectators, they could not even fucceed fo far as they had done in former inflances, by producing a specious counterfeit of this work of Mofes. Had they hitherto performed real miracles, by the affiftance of -the devil; how came they to defift now? It cannot be a greater miracle to produce lice, than to turn rods into ferpents, water into blood, and to create frogs. It has indeed been very often faid, that the devil was now laid under a restraint: but hitherto no proof of this affertion has been produced. The Scripture is filent, both as to the devil's being now reftrained from interposing any farther in favour of the magicians, and as to his having afforded them his affistance on the former occasions. But if we agree with Mofes, in afcribing to the magicians nothing more than the artifice and dexterity which belonged to their profession; we shall find that their want of fuccels in their last attempt, was owing to the different nature and circumstance of their enter-In all the former inftances, the magicians prize. knew beforehand what they were to undertake, and had had time for preparation. They were not fent for by Pharaoh, till after Mofes had turned his rod into a ferpent; and previous notice had been publicly given of the two first plagues *. But the orders in relation to the third, were no fooner iffued than executed, without being previoully imparted to Pharaoh+. So that in this laft cafe, they had no time for contriving any expedient for imitating or impeaching the act of Mofes. And had they been allowed time, how was it pollible for them to make it appear, that they produced those animals by which they themselves, and all the countrv. were already covered t and furrounded? Or. what artifice could efcape detection, in relation to infects, whofe minuteness hinders them from being perceived, till they are brought fo near as to be fubject to the closeft infpection? Now therefore the magicians chofe to fay, " This (last work of Moles) is the finger of God ||."

* Exod. viii. 18.

321

It has been generally thought, that the magicians here acknowlege, " that the God of Ifrael was " ftronger than the gods of Egypt, who had hitherto " affifted § them, but were now reftrained from do-" ing * Exod. vii. 15, 17. ch. viii. 1-4.

+ Ch. viii. 16.

‡ V. 18. There "being lice upon man, and upon beaft," feems to be affigned as a reason of the magicians being unable to counterfeit this miracle.

V. 19.

§ Had the magicians, in the former trials, been affifted by the gods of Egypt, (or any evil fpirits who fupported their caufe;)

322

÷.

" ing it by his fuperior power." But the text makes no mention of their allowing the God of Mrael to be fuperior to the gods of Egypt; much lefs of their admitting the former to be Jehovah, and the only true God. Nor do they refer to any fupernatural restraint upon the Egyptian deities, but to the last miracle * of Mofes, when they fay, " This is the finger of God;" or " of a god :" for the original word + admits this fenfe, and very probably was used in no other by the magicians, who believed in a plurality of gods. Being unable to turn the dust of the earth into lice, (and even to feem to do it.) they allow that this furpassed the fcience they professed, and argued the special miraculous interposition of some deity. There is no fort of evidence, that this language of the magicians proceeded from a defire of doing justice to the character and claims of the God of Israel; or that it was not merely defigned as the X 2 beft caufe;) they might have imputed their milcarriage in the trial under confideration, to the omiffion of fome ceremony or incantation, judged neceffary to engage their affiftance. The difappointments of the Pagan diviners were frequently accounted for in this manner, and their credit hereby faved. Nor was it difficult for idolaters to account for a difparity of power between different gods; each god having his peculiar province, as was fhewn above, p. 329.

* The Targum of Onkelos renders the words, "This plague comes from God." And the Atabic version expresses the same sense, "A sign of this nature is of God."

+ Heb. Elohim.

best apology they were able to make for their own failure of fuccefs, and to prevent Pharaoh from reproaching them with the want of skill in their pro-Certain it is, that this declaration of the feffion. magicians had no good effect upon Pharaoh, but feems rather to be mentioned as an occasion of his continued hardness *. Nay, the history plainly intimates, that the magicians themfelves afterwards confronted Mofes, till in punifhment of their obstinacy, they were fmitten with ulcers 1. I add, that the fenfe here affigned to their language, is perfectly agreeable to the account before given of the flate of the controverfy between them and Mofes: for it implies, that the magicians had not fo much as pretended to any miraculous interposition of the gods in their favour, but relied entirely upon the established rules of their art; and confequently that Pharaoh's view in fending

* V. 19. After relating what the magicians faid to Pharaoh, the hiftorian adds, "And Pharaoh's heart was harden. "ed, and he hearkened not unto them," that is, to Mofes and Aaron, (as clearly appears from the use of the same form of speech, Exod. vii. 13, 22.) "as the Lord had faid." Its having been taken for granted, that Pharaoh is here reproved for not hearkening to his magicians, (who never perfuaded their monarch to release the Israelites,) seems to have prevented critics from understanding the true meaning of the pasfage in question, "This is the finger of God."

‡ "The magicians could not fland before Mofes, becaufe "of the hoil: for the boil was upon the magicians." Exod. ix. II. Does not this imply, that till this time the magicians had, in fome method or other, oppofed or difparaged Mofes?

fending for them, was to enable himfelf to determine, whether the works of Mofes lay within the compass of it.

I cannot conclude this fubject without observing. that the strenuous but unsuccessful opposition of the magicians to Mofes, added ftrength to his caufe; as it ferved to manifest the divinity of his miracles, by clearing him from all fuspicion of magic. This art was thought equal to the most wonderful phenomena. In Egypt it was held in the higheft efteem, and carried to its utmost perfection. Pharaoh, without doubt, on the prefent most important and interesting occasion, engaged the affistance of the most able profeffors of it, who, from a regard to their own reputation and interest, would try every possible method to invalidate the miracles of Mofes. Nevertheles. their utmost efforts were baffled; and the vanity and futility of the claims of magic were detected and expofed : agreeably to the cenfure paffed upon them by St. Paul. For, fpeaking of certain perfons, whole opposition to genuine Christianity was the fole effect of their corrupt minds, without the least colour of reason; he compares them to Jannes and Jambres * who * Jannes and Jambres, mentioned by St. Paul, 2 Tim. iii. 8. from the Chaldee paraphrafe on Exod. vii. 11. are supposed to have been the two chiefs of Pharaoh's magicians. Numenius, the Pythagorean philosopher, (apud Euseb. Præp. Ev. 1. 9. c. 8.) fays, " they are inferior to none in magic skill; " and for that realon chosen by common consent to oppose " Mulœus," for fo the Heathens called Mofes). See Le Clere on Exod. vii. 12. and Pliny's Hift. 1. 30. c. t.

X 3

325

No Instances in Scripture of

who withftood Mofes; and did it, he must mean, with as little pretence; or there would be no justice in the comparison. He adds, " Their folly was manifest unto all men *;" and thus he taxes the conduct of the magicians with the most glaring absurdi-He cannot therefore be supposed to admit, that ty. they imitated and equalled for a time the miracles of Mofes, and then defifted as foon as they found themfelves unable to continue the contest to advantage, (which would have been a point of prudence); but to affert, that they wickedly and abfurdly attempted to place the feats of art on a level with the undeniable operations of a divine power; and fo fhamefully mifcarrying in their undertaking, they exposed themfelves to the contempt of those, who had once held them in high veneration. We proceed to confider.

SECT. II.

The Cafe of Samuel's Appearance to Saul at Endor. I Sam. xxviii.

I. A MONGST other deteftable methods of divination practifed by the ancient Pagans, one was their pretension of calling up and consulting the dead +. The soul of man, when separated from the

* 2 Tim. iii. 9.

+ This cuftom is referred to If. viii. 19. ch. xxix. 4. ch. 1xv. 3. A full account of it may be found in Lucan. 1. 6. v. 591, the body, was supposed to be cloathed with a material covering \*, which retained the shape and lineaments of the body, and was capable of being seen and heard; though of two fine a contexture to be felt or handled. This image + or shadow was what the Heathens conceived they could raise by proper facrifices to the earth, to the dead, and to the infernal deities  $\ddagger$ . Human victims || were frequently offered up on these occasions. At a time when the pretended art of raising up ghosts was held in high effeem § X 4 in

v. 591, &c. Virgil. Æn. 1. 6. Homer. 11. 1. 23. Odyfi 1. 10, 11. Statius's Thebaid, iv. v. 477. In Horace (epod. od. ult.) Canidia boafts, Poffim crematos excitare mortuos; and Medea, in Ovid, (Metam. 1. 7. v. 199, &c.) that fhe could command, manes exite fepulehris: See likewife Herodotus, 1. 5. c. 29. Heliodor. Æthiop. 1. 5. p. 293. Joseph. Antiq. 1. 6. c. 14. § 2. Horace, Satir. 1. 1. fat. 8. v. 28, 29. And Tibullus, lib. 1. el. 2. v. 45, 46. where the pretensions of forceteffes are thus defcribed, Hæc cantu finditque folum, manefque fepulchris Elicit, et tepido devocat offa rogo.

* Cic. Tufe. Disput. 1. 16.

+ The Greeks called it, educat; the Latins; fimulachrum, Imago, umbra.

1 Homer. Odyff. A. 21, &cc. Æschyl. Perf.

|| Servius on Virgil, Æn. 1. 6. 1. 107. and Patrick on Deut. xviii. 11.

§ Lucian de Aftrol. 24. Homer makes Ulyffes have recourfe to necromancy without any fcruple; but in later and more enlightened ages, the magic arts becoming contemptible and odious, Virgil reprefents Dido as making in apology for thing them. Æn. iv. 493.

No Instances in Scripture of

in the Pagan world, and temples were erected where the ceremony of conjuration was to be performed * ; Mofes, with the highest reason, branded it as a most atrocious crime, and punished it with death +. Unhappily however this execrable superstition (as indeed almost all the other fuperstitions of Paganism) was too much countenanced by the Christian converts, and particularly by the ancient Fathers, who univerfally afcribed to magicians and necromancers the power of calling up the fouls of the dead t. A blind deference to the authority of these writers, (whose faith was an unnatural mixture of Pagan and Christian principles, not less opposite to one another than light and darknefs,) has too long enflaved the Christian world, and hindered them from duly attending to the voice of reason, or what is taught in the facred writings. To this neglect we must afcribe their embracing an opinion, fo repugnant to the order of the natural world, and to the doctrines of revelation refpecting the flate of the dead. Can it be confiftent with a just reverence of God, to believe, that he has subjected the fouls of the departed to be remanded back * Herodot. 1. 5. c. 92. § 7. Paufanius, Bœot. c. 30. Plutarch. Vit. Cimon. p. 482. We read, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6. 2 Kings xxi. 6. that Manaffes " dealt with a familiar fpirit ;" which, according to the LXX, imports, his eftablishing the practice of confulting the dead, and erecting temples for that purpose.

+ Deut. xviii. 10, 11. Levit. xx. 27. See above, ch. 32 fect 3. p. 189.

1 Middleton's Free Inquiry, p. 66.

328

back from their defined abodes, and compelled to reveal what he has feen fit fhould be concealed; and this at the call of fome of the vileft mortals? Are even the most eminent faints and prophets doomed to fuch diffonour? And could Pagan priefts and diviners acquire fuch an extraordinary power over them, by the practice of the most execrable rites, and offering up the most inhuman facrifices? Surely natural reason confirms the fuffrage of Scripture, when it brands the whole magic art, to which evoeations of the dead, and all necromantic divinations appertain, as founded in imposture *.

II. There are fome who admit, that witches cannot difturb the fouls of good men, much lefs of prophets; who neverthelefs are of opinion that thefe wretched women can caufe " the devil to counterfeit the fouls of the dead;" and that in the cafe before us, " an evil fpirit appeared before Saul in the likenefs of Samuel +." This is not advanced upon the testimony of reason or experience, or upon the authority of divine revelation; but in conformity to the wild fictions of the Platonic philosophers ‡, invented to deceive the credulous, and to confirm their attachment to the worship of falle gods. Suppose the

* See ch. 3. fect. 3. p. 182.

+ See Patrick on I Sam. xxviii. 12.

2 Porph. de Abstinentia, l. 2. thus describes certain fallacious spirits, Γένος ἀπαταλῆς Φύσεως παντόμοςΦον κζ πολύτςοπον, ὑποπςινόμενον κζ θεώς, καὶ δαίμονας, κζ ψυχὰς τεθνηκότων. Compare Iamblichus de Myster. sect. 3. c. 31.

the forcerers and diviners amongst the Heathens had been able, by offering up facrifices to their infernal deities, and by other rites of necromancy, to caufe evil fpirits to affume the fhape of dead men, and to appear with their full refemblance before their former acquaintance: would not this deception, efpecially when accompanied with true predictions, have fupported idolatry as effectually, and done as much mifchief in the world, as a power of calling up the dead themfelves *? Befides, the very apparition of a fpiritual and incorporeal being, and the gift of prophecy, are real miracles, and as fuch cannot take place, but by divine appointment; unless all the arguments hitherto offered on this point are inconclusive. Lastly, the hiftorian calls the appearance to Saul, Samuel +; which he could not do with truth, if it was no other than the devil, who here appears, not as a tempter, but as a very fevere reprover of impiety and wickednefs.

III. Many learned men have maintained, that it was neither Samuel, nor an evil fpirit, who now appeared to Saul; but that the whole was the work of human imposture. In support of this opinion, it may be pleaded, that the woman to whom Saul applied to call up Samuel, though she is faid to have a familiar fpirit ‡, and pretended to be able to call up the dead, and * See above, ch. 3. fect. 2. p. 165.

+ I Sam. xxviii. 12.

‡ It was observed, ch. 3. sect. 3. p. 186. note ‡, that the Hebrew word ob, and the plural oboth, is generally rendered by and by their help to foretel future events; was merely a ventriloquift, one of those who had the art of speaking

330

by the LXX, if yareiuvitus, ventriloquifts. In If. xix. 3, it is rendered by them, rus in rus yus paranters, ' those that speak out of the earth.' I allow, that this art requires no evil fpirit; nor had the woman whom Saul had confulted the affiftance of any. Nevertheless, as these ventriloquists pretended to be, and were thought to be, infpired by those who applied to them to call up the dead; our translators had fome ground for rendering the word ob, 'a familiar fpirit.' Somewhat of this import, the word must have in the mouth of Saul, when he faid, "Seek " me a woman, that is mistress of ob; Divine to me by ob," (I Sam. xxviii. 7, 8.) and denote either ' a spirit of divination' in general, or a ' fpirit by which (it was believed) fhe could call up the dead." Saul must suppose the was agitated and fwelled by fome fpirit. See Le Clerc on Levit. xix. 31. It appears from Plutarch, (De Defect. Orac. tom. 2. p. 414.) Suidas, (tom. 1. ad voc. i [vareinuito, p. 667.) and Josephus, (Antiq. 1. 14. p. 354.) that those who were antiently called ventriloquifts, had afterwards the name of pythoneffes; which implies a pretence to divination. Python is the word used by the Vulgate verfion, 1 Sam. xxviii. 7, 8. And Mr. Voltaire (in his Philosophy of History, ch. 35.) fays, " It is strange " that the word Python, which is Greek, should be known to " the Jews in the time of Saul. Many learned men have con-" cluded from hence, that this hiftory was not written, till the " Jews traded with the Greeks, after the time of Alexander." But in the original Hebrew no fuch word as Python is used, (as Mr. Voltaire himfelf knew); but a term fo remote in found from it as ob. And for the credit of learning one would hope. (what I really believe to be the cafe,) that Voltaire is the only learned man, who ever undertook to determine the date of a Hebrew book, from the use of a word in a Latin translation, made many hundred years after it, and not to be found in the original. See Mr. Findlay's Vindication, p. 389.

33₽

No Instances in Scripture of 332

fpeaking with their mouths shut, so as to seem to fpeak out of their bellies, and who could throw their <sup>99</sup> voices as if they came out of the earth, or from other places: an art which must necessarily have been very ferviceable to those who counterfeited the answers of With regard to Saul; how eafy must it the dead. have been to impose upon a man, whose reason had been fo long diffurbed by jealoufy, and who was now funk into defpair, by the invation of his enemies, and a fenfe of his rejection by God? If he had been master of himself, would he have applied to a witch to raife up Samuel, and to extort from him the knowlege of futurity? or have expected God to answer him by a dead prophet, when he refused answering by the living; especially as he knew God had forbidden the confulting the dead? Saul came to the Pythonels by night: a feason the most proper for carrying on a fraud; and for this reason always * chofen for magical practices. Those who supported any reputation in this profession, as the woman applied to by Saul feems to have done, were perfons of great artifice, and of very extensive intelligence +, to as very feldom to be strangers to the character and fituation of those who came to confult them. We are not therefore to be furprized at the fagacity and address of the witch at Endor. She either knew Saul by the advantage of his stature, or picked * See either Patrick on 1 Sam. xxviii. 8. or Le Clerc on v. 13. or Dr. Chandler's Life of David, V. 1. p. 241, 273.

Digitized by Google

+ Le Clerc on I Sam. xxviii. 16.

picked out the fecret from his attendants, or inferred it from his giving her a promife not of fecrecy, (all that a private perfon could give,) but of impunity*, which Saul alone could make. When the pretended to have brought up Samuel, Saul was not allowed to fee him +, but received his account of the apparition from the woman herfelf, whofe great fright was a mere artifice t. The question which is put into the mouth of Samuel, " Why haft thou difquiet-" ed || me, to bring me up ?" by acknowledging the efficacy of magic, and the power of this pythonels to disturb his reft, and to bring him into this world at her pleafure, even against his own confent, and therefore without a commission from God; is highly abfurd in itfelf, and injurious to the character of this divine prophet. And though he is afterwards made to read Saul a very grave lecture, and to denounce his doom; yet she ran no risque by so bold an admonition

+ V. 13, 14.

‡ It may however be objected, that if the woman had a mind to make Saul believe fhe had raifed Samuel, why fhould fhe pretend to be frighted at the fight of him? at the fight of the perfon whom Saul defired, and fhe undertook to raife? I allow, fhe did not really expect to raife Samuei; neverthelefs, as fhe gave Saul this expectation, why did fhe counterfeit furprize at (what it became her to appear to expect) the fuccefs of her own art? To me it feems moft probable, that her furprife was not feigned, but real, and as fuch the hiftorian reprefents it.

|| This is fomewhat like the complaint of Atoffa in the Perfæ of Æschylus, v. 688.

* V. 10.

No Instances in Scripture of

monition and prediction; an oath in those days being effected fo facred, that perfons readily ventured their lives upon its credit.

With regard to her prediction, concerning the death of Saul and his fons, and the defeat of his army on the morrow; it has been affirmed by fome, -that it was not punctually accomplifhed; there being (in their opinion) more than a day from the time of its delivery to Saul's engaging the Philiftines. And if by to-morrow *, the pythoness meant the time to come; the prophecy was vague and indeterminate, and justly liable to the faspicion of imposture. She knew the fituation of public affairs, and that the armies of the Philistines and Israelites were ready to engage; fhe clearly inferred the iffue, from the fuperior numbers of the enemy, from the defpondency of Saul, and his rejection by God, and from the appointment of David to fucceed him +. It feemed moft

* The original word, machar, fignifies ' the next day,' in the following paffages, Exod. xvi. 23. ch. xxxii. 5. I Sam. ix. 16. ch. xix. 4. I Kings xix. 2. ch. xx. 6. 2 Kings vii. 1, 18. ch. x. 6. It means ' the time to come,' indefinitely, in Gen. xxx. 33. Exod. xiji. 14. Deut. vi. 20. Jofh. xxii. 24, 27, 28. compare Mat. vi. 34. The occafion therefore on which this word is ufed must determine the meaning of it. And on this occafion it must mean ' the next day,' or ' very shortly;' otherwife Samuel only affirms, that Saul and his fons would ' in fome future time' be numbered amongst the dead. Compare I Sam. xi. 9, 10. And if the prophecy was not accomplifued in this fenfe, it was not delivered by the real Samuel, but one who perfonated him.

† 1 Sam. xv. 28. ch. xxiv. 21. ch. xxvi. 25.

most probable to her, that Saul and his fons would not stain their characters by cowardice, and fave their lives by a thameful flight. She might be difappointed ; but the knew how to recover her credit in cafe the loft any, by imputing her deception to the omission of some necessary ceremony or incantation. By the event it appeared, that fhe was uncommonly fortunate in her conjectures. And the facred hiftorian faw fit to record this very remarkable cafe, partly to thew how defervedly Saul was rejected by God, and partly to guard the Israelites from giving too eafy credit to the prophecies of Pagan diviners. This opinion, however, like the immediately foregoing one, contradicts the facred historian, who not only represents the pythoness as affirming, but himself affirms *, that fbe face Samuel, and that Samuel fpoke to Saul; nor has he dropt the least hinr, that it was not the real Samuel of whom he was fpeaking. I add, therefore,

IV. That there is an opinion concerning this matter different from the foregoing: and it is this, that the appearance of Samuel to Saul was a divine miracle; (though whether the miracle confifted in raifing

* " And the woman faw Samuel," I Sam. XXViii. 12. " Samuel faid to Saul," v. 15. " Then faid Samuel," v. 16. Perhaps it may be objected, that the hiftorian does not himfelf affirm, that the woman faw Samuel; and defigned only to relate the account given by her, though he himfelf believed it to be falfe. But in this cafe, ought he not to have faid, the woman pretended to fee Samuel? and that the pretended Samuel spoke to Saul?

ing Samuel, or in prefenting an image or reprefentation of him before Saul, it is not neceffary to determine.) It feems to have been the opinion of the antient Jews *, that Samuel now appeared to Saul. And if this was the real cafe; the apparition mult be afcribed, not to the power of inchantment, but to the immediate appointment of God †, as a rebuke and punifhment to Saul.

In fupport of this opinion, it may be obferved, that Saul came to the woman by night, when fhe did not expect him, and was unprepared; and yet no fooner had fhe obtained from him a promife of fafety, and learnt who the perfon was he wanted her to raife, than Samuel appeared; before fhe had any time for juggle or artifice, or for the performance of thé

* The author of the book of Ecclefiafticus, ch. xlvi. 20, fays, "After his death Samuel prophecied, and fhewed the king his end." And the LXX, after relating the death of Saul for confulting the witch, add, " and the prophet Samuel anfwered him," 1 Chron. x. 13. Jofephus likewife was in the fame fentiment, Antiq. 1. 6. c. 14. fect. 2.

+ This opinion is maintained by Dr. Waterland, in his fermons, V. 2. p. 267. and defended by Dr. Delany in his Life of David. The fucceeding writer of the fame life, the learned Dr. Chandler, has combated this opinion, and given new firength to those objections which had been raised against it. I have attempted to answer or obviate those objections, except fuch as do not affect the Scripture history of this matter; for the doctor lays a stress on fuch, and particularly on Samuel's concealing himfelf " in a dark underground magic chamber of " a witch. Bat" (as the doctor observes on another occasion) " this is not the history, but an addition to it."

Digitized by Google

the neceffary factifices and incantations. "Saul faid, "Bring me up Samuel. And the woman faw Sa-"muel, and cried \*." The hiftorian here affirms, "that the woman faw Samuel," not that fhe pretended to fee him, much lefs that fhe raifed him. And the language plainly implies, that fhe faw him immediately + after Saul's requeft. At this fight, the text fays, "fhe cried with a loud voice," in the utmoft furprize and terror ‡, having no expectation of feeing Samuel, and having no pretence for afcribing his appearance to her own art, which fhe had not fo much as exerted. This (as a juftly celebrated cri- $\mathbf{Y}$  tic

* 1 Sam. xxviii. 11, 12.

+ This is an important circumstance. It is generally supposed, that some space of time intervened between the request of Saul, and the appearance of Samuel, fo as to leave room for the use of magical rites; and that it was in the use of these rites that Samuel was raifed. The English translation favours this supposition, and Dr. Chandler all along argues upon it. And it is acknowleged, that he very fuccefsfully shews, that it is very improbable, either that the witch should raife up Samuel by the power of magic, or that God himself should raise him up in her use of the magic art, especially as Samuel did not expressly inform Saul, that his appearing to him was not owing to her, but God. But this reasoning proceeds on a fuppolition wholly groundless; it does not appear that any magical rites were used, or that a moment's time intervened between Saul's request and Samuel's appearance. The English translators have inferted the particle when, (" And when the woman faw Samuel,") without any authority from the original, and merely to favour their own prejudices.

Digitized by Google

‡ See above, p. 333. note ‡.

No Inflances in Scripture of

tic* observes) "feems to be a plain evidence that her art was a cheat; and that the reality, (which he calls a likenefs of Samuel,) unexpected to her, was God's own extraordinary interposition." The forceress believing that Samuel could be fent to no lefs a perfon than Saul; from the appearance of the former, fhe concluded the latter was now present in difguise: which naturally made her very uneafy; as Saul had formerly cut off all those of her profession, and would now, fhe feared, be excited by Samuel to renew his former feverity +. The king bade her not be afraid, and afked what fhe faw? It must be acknowleged, that this question is a proof, that Saul did not himself fee Samuel at first; but it feems pretty evident from the hiltory, that he faw him afterwards. To Saul's queftion the woman replied, I faw gods 1, or a god, a perfon of a majestic form, or one in the habit of a judge or magistrate ||, ascending out of the earth. The dead were

* Dr. Clarke, V. 2. p. 361. fol.

+ "But why should the witch be frightened, if she had not used her magic arts?" She had acknowleged herself to be one that had a familiar spirit, and at Saul's defire had actually engaged to raise up Samuel. And it is in this sense the fays, she had "obeyed Saul, and put her life into his hand." I Sam. xxviii. 21.

‡ 1 Sam. xxviii. 13.

|| That the word elobim is applied to judges and magistrates, cannot be denied. See Exod. xxii. 8, 9, 28. Pf. lxxxii. 1, 6. Le Clerc and Patrick on 1 Sam. xxviii. 13. Dr. Chandler, (in his Life of David, p. 239.) objects to the application of this were thought to fpeak out of the earth *, but Samuel ascended and stood upon its surface in full view. Saul farther inquired, " What form is he of ?" The woman replied, " An old man cometh up, and he is covered with a mantle." What witches undertook to raife, was, the ghosts of the dead'; but the prefent appearance did not refemble a mere ghost or shadow, and agrees best with the supposition of its being Samuel himfelf, or a miraculous represention of his perfon and habit. It is observable, that Samuel was now covered with a mantle, the very habit in which he was clad, when he denounced + that fentence upon Saul, which he came now to confirm. While the woman was giving Saul this description of the apparition, Samuel feems to have advanced forward within his fight. For it is added, " And Saul perceived that it was Samuel himself ;," not merely from the descrip-Y 2 tion this plural term to a fingle perfon; yet this term is applied to Mofes, Exod. vii. 1. as was obferved above, p. 330. And it is certain that Saul did not understand the witch as speaking of more than one perfon, for he asks, "What is his form?" And she explains her own meaning in the answer she returns to this question, "An old man ariseth."

* If. xxix. 4. ch. viii. 19.

+ 1 Sam. xv. 27.

‡ The English translators, in order to favour the vulgar fuperstition concerning the power of witches to raise ghosts and spectres, have in this passage funk the word, bimfelf; which feems to have been inferted in the original, on purpose to diftinguish this appearance or representation of Samuel, from his ghost or shadow, over which alone the pythoness pretended to have any power.

No Instances in Scripture of

tion given of him by the woman, and from the circumftance of his appearing without her intervention, but by the evidence of his own fenfes; otherwife why are we told, that " he ftooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himfelf?" Is not this equivalent to telling us he faw Samuel *? Befides, the converfation between Saul and Samuel is itfelf a ftrong prefumption, that they were now in the prefence of each other.

This converfation was carried on in the abfence of the pythonefs, who withdrew from a prefence fhe little expected: for after the departure of Samuel, " the woman came to Sault." The behaviour of Samuel agrees well with the fuppofition of there being, purfuant to a divine command, either a real appearance or miraculous reprefentation of this prophet of God. He begins with a fevere reproof of Saul, " Why haft thou provoked  $\ddagger$  me, to make (occafion) me

* When David bowed to Jonathan, I Sam. xx. 41. and the man from Saul's camp bowed to David, 2 Sam. i. 2.; is it not hereby implied, that each faw the perfon who fpoke to him? and yet this is not afferted in the text. Now, if it be allowed, that Saul faw the perfon who fpoke to him; it will be impoffible to deny the reality of Samuel's appearance, or of fome miraculous reprefentation of him: fo well known was he to Saul by his voice, lineaments, and ftature.

+ 1 Sam. xxviii. 21.

t This is the true rendering of the original word, which is derived from 1.47. A very learned critic (Dr. Chandler, in his Life of David, p. 249.) is miftaken in afferting, that " it never denotes to provoke, but to move and diffurb by violence.". It me to rife up?" Here his rifing up is not ascribed to the pythonefs, or to her magic art; nor strictly and properly to Saul, it being cuftomary with the Hebrews to express the intention by the effect *;) but to the prophet's indignation conceived against the king on account of his inquiring what to do, in a way fo expressly forbidden by God; to the impoffibility (as it were) of God's passing over so great an offence in filence. Accordingly, Saul's answer is manifestly an apology, and fhews that he underflood the prophet as reproving him, " I am fore distressed; for " the Philistines make war against me, and God is " departed from me, and answereth me no more, " neither by prophets, nor by dreams: therefore " have I called thee +, that thou mayeft make known " unto me what I shall do t."

Υз.

Samuel;

It is used to describe any violent commotion or concussion; (Job. ix. 6. ch. xxxvii. 2. If. v. 25. Amos viii. 8. Hab. iii. 7.) and hence is applied to the violent agitation of any pasfion, and of anger in particular. In Prov. xxix. 9. It is rendered, ' to rage;' in Ezek. xvi. 43. ' to fret;' (where the context requires a much stronger word, ' to provoke even to fury;') in If. xxviii. 21, ' to be wroth;' in Job xii. 6. ' to provoke.' See likewise Hab. iii. 2. If. xxxvii. 28, 29. Job xxxix. 24. where the noun derived from this verb is translated rage. It cannot therefore be inferred from the use of this word, that Samuel was forcibly compelled to appear on this occasion.

* See above, ch. 4. fect. 1. p. 312. note ||.

+ This language of Saul does not imply, that he had invok4 ed Samuel; it expresses only his design in applying to the witch.

1 Sam. xxviii. 15:

No Instances in Scripture of

Samuel, in his reply, first of all exposes the abfurdity of Saul's conduct in applying to him, when he found himfelf abandoned by God; then explains to him the true grounds of his defertion, and of the present distressed fituation of his affairs; and lastly denounces farther judgments against him, as a punifhment of the guilt he was at that very time contracting. "Wherefore then doest thou ask" (direction and affiltance) " of me, feeing Jehovah is " departed from thee, and is become thine enemy, " or, is with thine enemy *? And Jehovah hath " done (or, will do) to him, (viz. Saul's rival or " enemy) as he fpake by me:" that is, " prone " as you were to doubt of the truth of those threat-" nings which God uttered against you by my mouth, " they are now ready to be accomplished: for Je-" hovah has rent the kingdom out of thine hand, " and given it to thy neighbour, even David : be-" cause thou obeyedst not the voice of Jehovah, nor " executed his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore " has Jehovah done this thing unto thee this day. " Moreover, Jehovah will also deliver Israel, with " thee, into the hands of the Philiftines : and to-" morrow shalt thou and thy fons be with me," (in the state of death, or of separate spirits +.) " Jehovah " fhall

* Thus the last claufe of the 16th verfe may be rendered; and the meaning is, as Vatablus observes, "Jehovah favours thine enemy." This gives an easy fense to the first claufe of the 17th verse, "And Jehovah has done" (or will do) " to him," viz. to thine enemy, &c.

+ Probably this is all that Samuel meant by telling Saul, ** he

3.12

Digitized by Google

i

343

" shall also deliver the host of Israel into the hands " of the Philiftines." Is this the language of an artful impostor, whole business it was to flatter and delude the king, to foothe his diffrefs, and gain his favour, and thereby procure from him a larger gratuity? Or if, from a regard to the credit of her art, fhe did not chuse to raise his hopes; why did she strive to provoke his refentment, by the freedom of her reproofs, and the denunciation of the most dreadful judgments? There is a keennels and alperity in this answer, absolutely inconsistent with the least regard to her own interest or fafety; and not to be accounted for on the supposition of its proceeding from a perfon of art and address under the circumstances of this forcerefs. Indeed the very foul of Samuel feems to breathe in these expressions of displeasure against the dilobedience and wickedness of Saul.

But it is objected, " that this could not be the " language of the real Samuel, becaufe he has not " expressed any disapprobation of Saul for having " recourse to the arts of divination, which were fo " offensive to God: and that it was unworthy of " God to raife up Samuel from the dead, only to " confirm a former fentence against Saul, which " was declared irrevocable." The former fentence Y 4 against

"he fhould be with him." So that there is here no neceffary reference to the antient opinion of the Pagans, that the fhades dwelt together according to their tribes and families; Homer, Odyff. A; nor any affurance given him of happinels in a future flate, though fome who fuffer the judgments of God in this world, are objects of his forgivenels in the next; 1 Cor. xi. 32.

No Inflances in Scripture of

. 344

against Saul did not affect his life, but his crown one by; nor was the time fixed for the execution of this fentence. Saul was spared, and even permitted to reign over Israel, till the commission of this new crime of confulting the witch; which the author of the book of Chronicles affigns particularly as the ground of his death, though not exclusively of his former disobedience : " So Saul died for his trans-" greffion which he committed against the Lord, " even against the word of the Lord, which he kept " not; and also for asking counsel of one that had a " familiar fpirit, to inquire of it "." And it is evident from the language of Samuel, that, befides confirming the former fentence, he denounced new and most terrible judgments against Saul, and against his family and forces; and for no other reason that appears, but the crime he was at this time committing. It is farther objected, " that Samuel dexteroufly a-" voided an answer to Saul's principal inquiry," and that his language " has all the air of evalion and artifice #." Saul wanted to be informed by Samuel, how he was to act in his prefent critical fituation, or how he might extricate himfelf from the danger which then threatened him. And Samuel, inftead of having recourfe to any evalion or artifice " to extricate himfelf from the" (pretended) " difficulty and neceffity of giving Saul the advice he wanted;" gave him plainly to understand, that it was too late to apply for * 1 Chron. x. 13.

7 Dr. Chandler's Life of David, V. 1. p. 251, 252.

Digitized by Google

for any fuch advice as he asked; his doom being already sealed, and his sentence on the point of being carried into execution.

Though Samuel's prophecy is called by fome an eafy conjecture; yet it feems to argue a forefight more than human. Samuel diftinctly foretold the following remarkable particulars. First of all, the death of Saul. And, was it certain that Saul would not shun an engagement, when he was so dejected, and had been in fo remarkable a manner fore-warned of his danger? and that he would even rush on his destruction? Secondly, Samuel farther foretold the death of Saul's fons. And who but God could certainly forefee that Saul's three fons, who endeavoured to fave themfelves by flight, fhould neverthelefs perish by the fword of the enemy? Thirdly, Samuel foretold, that, together with Saul, God would deliver up Israel, the army and people of Israel, into the power of their enemies, and that their camp should be taken, which made it the more difficult to bring a new army into the field, and exposed their country to the inroads of the Philiftines *. Laftly, the exact time

* The last clause of the 19th verse is not, what it is commonly made to be, a bare repetition of the first clause. By lfrael in the first clause, we are to understand the army (including the people) of Ifrael; (compare v. 4. and ch. xxxi. 1.) and by the boft of Ifrael in the last clause, is meant more especially their camp; the loss of which preventing them from bringing a new army into the field, "the Philistines came and dwelt in" feveral of "the cities" which belonged to the Israelites. I Sam. xxxi. 7.

time is determined, when these events were to happen, which was the very next day. Accordingly, within this space of time, the several parts of this prediction received a punctual accomplishment. The prophecy therefore seems to argue an unerring and divine prescience *.

But here it may be asked, " Is it likely, that God " should refuse to answer Saul, when he consulted " him in ways appointed by himself, and yet should " answer him in a forbidden way; and hereby fa-" vour and encourage necromantic divinations, when " he had expressly ordered those who practised them " to be punished with death?" Saul having been rejected by God for his stubborn disobedience to the divine orders, had no right to ask or expect his direction and preservation in his present danger; nor could God have granted it, consistently with his design of preparing the way for the advancement of David to the throne of Israel. For this reason, God did not answer * Those, instead of falsifying, do really confirm the truth of this prediction, who object, " that Saul hardly returned " to his camp early enough in the morning after he had con-" fulted the witch, or in fufficient so prepare for the " battle that day, which therefore must have been fought the " day after." For what would be with us the fecond day after the night in which Saul confulted the witch, was the morrow or next day with the Jews, who reckoned from fun-fet to funfet; and confequently included what we should call the next day, in the natural day on which he was at Endor. Nay, if the prophecy was not delivered till after midnight, we should not understand by to-morrow any part of the day which was begun.

Digitized by Google

fwer him in ways of his own appointment. Nor did he afterwards answer him in a forbidden way; but (if the explication here given of this hiftory be just) interpofed previously to the use of magic rites, and on purpose to reprove Saul for having recourse to them, and to pronounce upon him the fentence of death for this very crime at the inftant he was committing it; and thus to testify the divine displeasure against it. How this could encourage the use of necromancy, or indeed how God could more effectually discourage that most detestable art; I am not able to conceive. The method of God's proceeding on this occafion, feems very conformable to what he had been pleafed to do before, in other cafes of a like nature. When the king of Moab had recourfe to forceries, God himfelf interpofed, and fo over-ruled the mind of Balaam, that he was compelled to blefs those whom Balak wanted him to curfe*. And when king Ahaziah fent to confult Baalzebub about his recovery, God by his prophet Elijah stopt his messengers, reproved their master, and denounced his death +. And why might not God in like manner interpole in the case of Saul, in order to disappoint his hopes of divine protection, and to denounce his doom; the foreknowlege of which had fo great an effect upon him, that he inftantly fell down into a fwoon, and could no longer bear up against the bitter agonies of his mind? What is there in this conduct.

* Numb. xxiii.

+ 2 Kings is 2-4.

duct inconfistent with the justice or fanctity of the great Governor of the world ? Could Saul complain of being fentenced to die for having recourse to those impious arts, the exercise of which he himself had heretofore punished with death? How proper was it, that his death flould appear to be the punishment of his guilt? His death, if it had not been foretold, would have been confidered as a common event, rather than as the execution of the divine difpleafure. He had certainly difregarded the threatenings of God to depose him, and to appoint David in his stead; and very probably he had taken occasion from his fuspending their execution, to turn them into ridicule. Finding that he continued in the full posseffion of his kingdom, many years after Samuel had foretold it fhould be taken from him; he might afcribe the prediction to the difaffection and enmity of the prophet, and his attachment to David. To clear the character of Samuel from all fuspicion, and vindicate the credit of his predictions; to evidence the divine •defignation of David to the throne of Ifrael; and in the most affecting manner to display the righteous vengeance of God against the practice of necromantic divinations, by which Saul had now filled up the measure of his guilt; seems to have been the defign of God in this miraculous appearance of his prophet.

I have now laid before the reader what occurred to me upon this difficult fubject; and fupported in the ftrongeft manner I was able, from the reafonings of others, and my own reflections, the two different explications of it which carry with them the greateft appearance appearance of probability. I pretend not to decide which explication is true. Neither of them countenances the opinion, that miracles are performed by evil fpirits; which is all I contend for. That which was proposed last, feems to me the best fupported; though on this, as on every other point, I leave every one to form his own judgment.

Digitized by Google

The cafe of the devil's appearing to our Saviour in the wildernefs, and transporting or accompanying him from one place to another, and shewing him all the kingdoms of the world; would naturally fall next under our confideration. But if the explication I have elsewhere given of this history, be just; it is no exception to the principle we have hitherto been endeavouring to establish. In confirmation of that explication, I would observe, that if it be true, that the Scripture appropriates all miracles to God; then the common interpretation of our Saviour's temptations, which as for its for many miracles to the devil, must be false.

We have now examined the fenfe of revelation concerning the author of miracles; produced many arguments to fhew, that the Scriptures reprefent them as works peculiar to God, and attempted to folve the feveral objections against this account. The number and eminence of those Christian writers, who have taught, that the Scriptures allow to evil spirits a miraculous power, and the use made of that doctrine by unbelievers, in spiping the foundation of the Jewish and Christian revelations, together with the nature and importance of the subject itself, will excuse the compase

Digitized by Google

No Instances in Scripture of

compass with which it has been treated. I will add, that deifts should not avail themselves of the errors of Christians, which are arguments only against the perfons who advance them, not against their religion. And even for them much allowance will be made by those, who confider, that the opinion entertained at prefent concerning the miraculous power of evil fpirits, prevailed very generally amongst the ancient Heathens and Jews; was early engrafted into the Scriptures themfelves, by falfe translations of them; and during the triumph of popery was deemed an effential article of the Christian faith. For how many ages were men prevented, by their prejudices, from understanding the volume of nature, as well as that of revelation? At the revival of learning, and the glorious era of the Reformation, when men began to recover the use of their understandings, and to apply the true rules of criticism to the study of the Scriptures; they at the fame time began to call in question the empire of Satan over the natural world. Luther abolished the practice of exorcisms, and many others no longer gave credit to idle stories of fascinations and magic. Much was then done to clear revelation from various corruptions which had been introduced into it. " And much" (fays one of the most capable judges * of the subject) " still remains to be done." No empire fo durable as that of error and and prejudice over the human mind; and it may still require a length of ages totally to subvert it. In the mean time, no one can complain of the obscurity of the Scriptures, in any necessary article of faith or practice.

* Dr. Lowth, bishop of Oxford, in his fermon at the vifitation of the bishop of Durham, p. 24.

СНАР.

CHAP. V.

SHEWING THAT MIRACLES, CONSIDERED AS DI-VINE INTERPOSITIONS, ARE A CERTAIN PROOF OF THE DIVINITY OF THE MISSION AND DOC-TRINE OF A PROPHET. THE ADVANTAGES AND NECESSITY OF THIS PROOF IN CONFIRMING AND PROPAGATING A NEW REVELATION. MIRACLES USEFUL IN REVIVING AND ESTABLISHING THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURAL RELIGION.

HITHERTO we have been endeavouring to prove, that miracles require an immediate act or order of God, and are his peculiar works. We are now to fhew, what is a neceffary confequence from this principle, that thefe works, when properly applied, are a divine testimony to the perfon on whose account they are wrought, and to that dostrine or message which he delivers in the name of God. It was for the fake of this important conclusion, that we undertook to prove in the preceding chapters, by arguments drawn both from reason and revelation, that miracles are divine interpositions.

Miracles may be performed by God, without the intervention of men; and for other purpofes, befides that of attefting the miffion of a prophet. Nor can they ferve as testimonials to a prophet, but under fuch circumstances, as point out a relation between those works

a Revelation from God.

works and his mission. If it does not clearly appear, that they are wrought at his inftance, or in his favour; they will not be known to bear any more relation to him, than to any other perfon. Equally neceffary is it, that the prophet should expressly affert his mission from God, explain its purport, and allege his miracles in proof of it; that their true intention may neither be overlooked nor miltaken, as the miracle of St. Paul at Lystra was at first by the Lycaonians*, through their inattention to the doctrine which he preached. If miracles are not declared to be figns of a divine miffion; they cannot be intended, nor ought to be regarded as fuch. It feems likewife to be farther requisite, that the person who claims a divine commission, and appeals to miracles in proof of it, fhould explain this commission, and deliver his meffage, when going to perform his miracles, or while he continues to perform them; that he may not apply them, nor be fulpected of applying them to a wrong purpole; and that the connexion between them, and the point to be proved by them, may be the more readily difcerned, and fenfibly felt.

But miracles, if they argue a divine interpolition, muft be effecemed divine credentials, under the following circumftances: when it clearly appears, that they are wrought at the inftance, or in favour, of a perfon, who claims a miffion from God, delivers a meffage in his name, and appeals to these works, before or during the time of their performance, in proof of the divinity of his miffion and doctrine. The works Z having * Acts xiv. 11.

353 '

having God for their author, must, in this cafe, be confidered as a declaration of his will, as his immediate answer to the appeal that had been made to him, as the figns or testimonies of his approbation of the perfon claiming a miffion from him, and profeffing to reveal his will. In this method God may be faid to feal his commission, and to testify his approbation of the purport of it; just as we testify our affent to what another speaks in our name, by some particular token; or make what is contained in a writing, though not drawn up by ourfelves, our own act and deed, by fetting our hand and feal to it. It is evident, that miracles, in the cafe here supposed, prove the divinity of the doctrine, as well as of the million of the perfon employed in publishing it to the world; or God's approbation of him, both in afferting and executing his commission. It is fcarce necessary to add, that if divine interpolitions in favour of a perfon claiming a commission from God, prove the diwinity of his doctrine, they likewife prove its truth *. For it is impoffible, as all men will allow, that God fhould affix his feal to a lie +; or bear an immediate testimony

* To the prophet who had raifed up her fon to life, the woman of Sarepta faid, "Now by this I know thou art a man of "God, and that the word of the Lord by thy mouth is truth." I Kings xvii. 24. This is the language of nature and common fenfe.

+ Κομιδή «ξα ο Θεος άπλει η άληθες, εν τε έργω η εν λόγω. Και εύτε αύτος μεθίςαται, ούτε άλλες έζαπατά, ούτε κατά Φαντασίας, ούτε κατά λόγες, ούτε κατά σημείων πομπάς, ούθ ύπας' ούδ όνας. Plat Republ. 1. 2. p. 431. ed. Ficini.

Digitized by Google

a Revelation from God.

testimony in favour of one, who either falfely claims a divine commission, or is unfaithful in the execution of it. God is too wife to be deceived himself, too just and too good to deceive his creatures.

This is the manner in which miracles, fuppofing them to be divine interpolitions, furnish out a conclusive proof of the truth and divine original of a fupernatural revelation. Before we proceed to confider the advantages of this proof, it will be neceffary to take notice of the different manner in which the argument is stated by other writers.

1. By the adversaries of revelation it has been afferted, " that miracles, of themfelves, are proofs only " of power, without having any relation to the doc-" trine of the performer." Nay, the advocates of revelation *, though they think " that miracles di-" rectly prove the commiffion of the perfon who does " them to proceed from him, by whole power alone " they could be performed;" yet maintain, " that " miracles cannot prove the truth of any doctrine," and that " there is no connexion between any miracles " and doctrines." If miracles, in themfelves, prove only the interpolition of fome fuperior being; it must be difficult, we allow, to difcern any connexion between these works and the truth of doctrines. But it has been shewn, that these works are proofs of a divine power and interpofition; and therefore, under proper circumstances, divine testimonials to a pro-Z 2 phet;

* See Bp. Sherlock's Difcourfes, V. 1. p. 289, 290. and V. 2. p. 10.

phet; testimonials to his doctrine as well as to his mission. If he declares himself to be fent from God, to deliver a meffage in his name, or to teach a new doctrine; and performs and appeals to miracles in proof both of his miffion and doctrine; will not the miracles (fuppofing them to be divine works) equally prove the divinity of both ? Indeed, his doctrine is included in his commission, and what God principally intended to atteft. And if the miracles prove the divinity of his doctrine, they must prove its truth; unless proving it to be from God, be no proof that it According to this state of the case, there is is true. a very strift connexion between miracles, and the truth of doctrines *. Agreeably hereto, we find that the prophets of God, both under the Old Teftament and the New, at the fame time that they afferted their divine mission, explained the particular object of it, or the purpole for which they were fent: and that they urged their miracles as immediate divine testimonies to their message or doctrine +, as well as to their mission. Nor can we have any higher evidence of the truth and certainty of any doctrine, than the immediate attestation of God to it.----If fome

* It might have been added, that miracles may be of fuch a nature as to exemplify, as well as to atteft, the doctrine of a prophet. But this connexion between doctrines and fuch miracles as are proper famples of those doctrines, could not be taken notice of here; as we are now confidering miracles only in their most general view, as divine interpositions.

+ John xiv. 10, 11. Mark xvi. 20. Acts xiv. 3. See above, ch. 3. fect. 6. p. 266.

Digitized by Google

fome have contracted the use of miracles within too narrow limits; others, running into the opposite extreme, have stretched it too far. For,

2. Miracles have been urged, to prove the univerfal and perpetual infpiration of the perfons who performed them. By fome learned writers it has been afferted *, that " we may be rationally affured, that " a prophet is fent of God; BEFORE we have " heard one word of his doctrine;" and supposed +, that all the miracles of a prophet may be performed first, and his doctrine be delivered afterwards. In proof of this point, they appeal first to the miracles of Mofes in Egypt, and at the Red Sea; which they allege, proved Mofes to be an oracle, and would have proved the divinity of all the doctrines and precepts he afterwards delivered, even if Moles had performed no other miracles t. Whereas the ends proposed, or the doctrines to be proved by the miracles of Mofes in Egypt, were diffinctly flated before || the works were performed. Those ends were, not the proving Mofes to be an oracle, or a divine lawgiver to the Ifrael-23 ites.

* By, Mr. Hallet on miracles, p. 57, 61, 63. and Dr. Benfon, in his life of Chrift, ch. 6. fect. 6. p. 224.

+ Dr. Benfon, p. 225, 228, &c.-

† P. 229.

" "Aaron fpake all the words which Jehovah had fpoken " unto Mofes, and (then) did the figns in the fight of the " people." Exod. iv. 29, 30. In like manner Mofes and Aaron delivered their meffage to Phaorah, before they proved their miffion by miracles. Exod. v. 1.

ites, but the effecting their deliverance out of Egypt, the exemplary punishment of oppression and idolatry, and the manifestation of the true God to the world *. Nor was it upon this evidence, but upon the evidence of the miracles wrought afterwards in the wildernefs, that the Israelites received Moses as a divine lawgiver, whofe authority God continued to fupport by a feries of miracles, even after all his doctrines and precepts were delivered. The learned writers + next appeal to the miracles wrought by St. Paul at Philippi; though we read of his preaching t there fome confiderable time before we have any account of his working miracles. Thefe ingenious gentlemen all along argue on the fupposition, that the miracles of a prophet are a general affurance, that we may fafely trust him as an oracle ||, and depend upon all he fays as long as he lives §: a fuppofition altogether groundlefs, and of a like nature with that on which the unhappy man feems to have proceeded, who was flain by a lion, for giving too hafty credit to a prophet ¶.

Hardly any thing has done more prejudice to revelation, than the milapplication of its miracles to purpofes they were never intended to answer. What has

Digitized by Google

* See above, ch. iii. fect. 5.

- + Dr. Benfon, p. 230. Mr. Hallet, p. 63.
- ‡ Acts xvi. 14-18.
- || Mr. Hallet, p. 41, &c.
- § Dr. Benson, p. 224, 230.

¶_1 Kings xiii.

a Revelation from God.

has furnished infidelity with more objections *, and occasioned fo much perplexity to fincere Christians; as mens maintaining that a prophet who has once performed miracles, is thereby rendered for ever incapable of error and vice +; and their building articles of faith on his private opinions with respect to fub-Z 4 jects

* Mr. Voltaire, in his Treatife on Toleration, fays, " that " Jephtha's declaration, (Judges xi. 24.) who was infaired by " God, is at leaft an evident proof, that God permitted the " worfhip of Chemofh." But this writer mifreprefents the meaning of Jephtha, who is only arguing with idolaters upon their own principle, that all nations had a right to keep what their gods had enabled them to poffefs: which is very different from allowing the divinity and worfhip of Chemofh. Nor was Jephtha infpired when he fpoke the words here referred to. " The Spirit of the LORD came upon him" afterwards, (Judges xi. 29.) inciting him to undertake, and enabling him to accomplifh, the deliverance of the Ifraelites. Can it be inferred from hence, that whenever he fpoke it was by divine infpiration ?

† An opinion repugnant to the express declarations of revelation. Mat. vii. 22, 23. Heb. vi. 4, 5, 6. See also Acts xxiii. 5. ch. xy. 12, 39. Gal. ii. 11, 14. When our Saviour fays, Mark ix. 39. "No man, who shall do a miracte in my "name, can lightly  $(\tau \alpha_X \nu)$ , quickly) speak evil of me;" he means, that it ought not to be supposed concerning any person, who had so great faith in him, as to undertake and perform miracles in a dependance upon his divine power, that he was at that time disposed to revile and blassheme him. This faith, however, did not always govern mens lives. For to fome, "who did many wonderful works in the name of Chriss, he "will fay, I never knew (or approved) you." The eleven apostles, while their minds were darkened by many prejudices and even Judas, wrought miracles.

360

jects not included in his commiffion, and with regard to which he might think and fpeak like all other men ?

All the prophets of God did not perform their miracles with one view, nor were their commissions of the fame extent. The commission of some was limited to one particular purpole or feason; that of others was more general and lafting. Each clearly ftated the diffinct and special purposes of his own miffion and miracles; and always declared what those purposes were, before he performed his miracles, or (which is the fame thing) before he ceafed to perform miracles. And the miracles were defigned to atteft his commission, and the purposes of it, in their just extent, as explained by the prophet himself, during the time that the miraculous testimony was borne to On this plan, no inconvenience could poffibly him. enfue from the errors of a prophet, on subjects foreign to his commission; nor even from his acting afterwards contrary to his own convictions, with respect to the fubject of his commission; or on any other occasion. The evidence of Christ's divine authority, arifing from miracles performed by those who afterwards revolted from the faith or practice of Christian-. ity, was not impaired by that revolt. Nor did the culpable timidity of Peter, in withdrawing himfelf from the fociety of the Gentile Christians, that he might not give offence to the Jews, weaken those proofs of the exemption of the former from the obligation of circumcifion, which arofe from the fpecial miracles by which it was confirmed, in the cafe of Cornelius and other uncircumcifed Gentiles. In a word,

Digitized by Google

a Revelation from God.

word, miracles must not be extended beyond their proper use, nor applied to any other purposes, than , what the nature of the works themselves, or the declarations of the performer, will warrant. Miracles are the testimony of God himself, to a person professing to deliver a message from him; a proof of the divine original of his mission and doctrine. But we are to receive as divine upon this evidence, no other doctrines, than those it was designed to confirm.

Having attempted to fhew, under what circumftances miracles, confidered as divine interpolitions, are a certain proof of doctrines; I proceed to point out the advantages of this proof, particularly in introducing and eftablifhing a revelation from God. We fhall ftill argue on the fuppolition of miracles being divine works; though, after what has been urged above, it must be unneceffary at every turn to fhew, that the argument concludes only on this fuppolition.

I. The proof from miracles of the divine commiffion and doctrine of a prophet, is, in itfelf, decifive and abfolute. What reafoning can be more conclufive than this, "He that does fuch works as no man " can do, unlefs God be with him, muft be fent of " God, and faithfully publifh his will to the world?" The God of truth cannot bear an immediate teftimony to any one as a divine meffenger, whom he has not fent, or who publifhes his own inventions as the oracles of heaven. No man was ever fo abfurd as to maintain, that atteftations properly divine can deceive us, or that God would immediately interpofe in fupport of falfe claims. And, this, proof of a divine vine commission from the credentials we are now fpeaking of, is full and fufficient, without taking into confideration the doctrine they atteft. The proof arifes out of the nature of the miracles, independent of every thing elfe. This fully vindicates the conduct of the prophets of God, who, as was fhewn above *, demanded the immediate affent and regard of mankind to their divine commission, upon the fole evidence of their miracles, and prior to all reafonings concerning the natural propriety and fitnels of their doctrine. It was only by fuch works, as were fure tokens of a divine mission, that it was possible for them to overcome the objections and corrupt prejudices of mankind against their message. Had Moses told Pharaoh, or Christ the Jews +, " that before the evi-" dence of miracles was admitted, as a proof of a di-" vine commission, the matter of that commission " must be examined by mens natural notions, and " be made appear to be conformable to them;" the miracles of these divine prophets would have produced only endless debates, instead of conviction. But the evidence of their missions from these works, was in itfelf (as it was neceffary it should be) decifive and abfolute.

To what is here advanced, fome may object, " that " if doctrines are to be received as coming from " God, upon the bare atteftation of miracles, with-" out regard to the nature of the doctrines them-" felves;

Digitized by Google

* Ch. 3. feet. 6.

7. See p. 396.

a Revelation from God.

" felves; we may then be obliged, under the fanc-" tion of these works, to receive the most absurd and " immoral doctrines, and there can be no poffible " guard against imposture." This objection supposes, that doctrines immoral and abfurd may receive the fanction of miracles : a fuppofition which ought not to be made; because miracles are works peculiar to God, and it is impoffible for God to lie. The principle on which we here argue, that miracles are immediately to be referred to God, is fo far from leaving us open to delufion and imposture, that it contains our greateft fecurity from it; it furnishes us with all the evidence we can derive from the wildom, veracity, and perfect rectitude of the divine Being, that the attestation of miracles cannot accompany any falle doc-It has never been shewn, that such doctrines trines. ever have received * the attestation of miracles: and inalmuch as miracles are works appropriate to God. it is impoffible that fuch doctrines ever fhould receive this attestation. Whenever therefore the miracle is apparent, (there being either ocular demonstration. or other certain evidence of its truth;) it is not neceffary to enquire, whether the doctrine be fuch as may come from God, or may be true: for the miracle (being divine) does alone affure us, previous to fuch enquiry, that it did come from God, and therefore that it is true; nay, that it is as impossible it. should be false or immoral, or absurd, as it is that God should act contrary to his own perfections. If the miracle be of dubious evidence, and the doctrine fuch

* See above, ch. 2. fect. 2.

363

as could not proceed from God; the proper inference will be, not that the miracle was performed by wicked fpirits, but that it was invented by wicked men. The confideration of the doctrine may ferve, in this cafe, to detect the falfehood of miracles; but is never neceffary to establish the divinity of thefe works, or the truth and divinity of the doctrine itself which they are wrought to confirm: the latter must be true and divine, because the former can have no other author but God. The objection therefore puts a cafe which can never possibly happen: it supposes that God may publish and attest a falsehood to the world.

II. The proof of a divine miffion and doctrine from miracles, is the most natural and agreeable to the common fense of mankind in all ages. The works of creation are standing evidences of the existence and attributes of God. The continued order of the universe is a sure demonstration of his constant providence. It is upon the theatre of nature, that God is continually manifesting himself to mankind. Here, therefore, it is most natural to suppose, he will difplay his power, and fignify his pleafure; fhould he fee fit to make any new discoveries of his will. If he would evidence to his creatures the interpolition of the Lord of nature; in what other method can this be fo fuitably done, as by controuling the laws of nature? And when he does this in answer to an immediate appeal to him, made by one who claims a miffion from him; does he not declare in the most proper and expressive language, that it is his will, that that claim fhould be received and admitted? This

Digitized by Google

This appears to have been the general fense of mankind in all ages, concerning genuine miracles; as we have had occasion to fhew *.

The natural fenfe of mankind with regard to this, as well as other fubjects, may, no doubt, be in fome measure perverted by fophistry and superstition. And it has been by fome affirmed, that in the age in which the Gospel was published, both Jews and Gentiles entertained a very low opinion of miracles in general. From hence others have been forward to conclude, that they were not a very proper means of recommending the Gofpel to the regard of mankind. It is not true, however, that genuine and incontestable miracles were held in difesteem at the commencement of the Christian era. The Jews indeed objected to Chrift, that he dispossefied demoniacs by the affistance of the prince of demons; but it has been fhewn +, that they did not, and could not, pass the like judgments on his other miraculous works. Their own religion being grounded upon miracles; they were not fo abfurd as to deny their being proper proofs of a divine mission. Miracles were not only an evidence, by which they were determined, but which they prefetred to any other : " The Jews require a fign ‡."

With

Digitized by Google

* Ch. 2. fect. 5.

+ Ch. 3. fect. 6. p. 270. Mr. Biscoe, after others, afferts, that both Jews and Heathens ascribed the miracles both of Christ and his apostles to the power of magic. Sermons at Boyle's Lecture, p. 293. But his authorities will not support his affertion, in this large extent.

‡ I Cor. i. 22.

With refpect to the Greeks or Gentiles, the learned amongst them, it is acknowleged, fought after wifdom, were captivated with curious speculations, fet off with the charms of eloquence; and may in fome fense be faid to have held miracles in contempt *, that is, fuch events as were by them commonly defcribed by this term. These were of two forts. Some of them, though efteemed miracles by the vulgar, were not really fuch, but mere natural events; inundations, prodigies, monsters, together with all the feats of forcery and magic : and these might very reasonably be rejected by all who were acquainted with the powers of nature + and art. Others were events truly fupernatural; but they were confidered as grofs impoftures. They were not only fo ill attefted, but fo incredible in themfelves, fo defititute of all rational intention and wife contrivance, fo vifibly calculated to ferve fome political purpofe, fo trifling, or ridiculous, or abfurd in their own nature ; that it cannot be matter of wonder, that the wifer Heathens rejected them with difdain. Marcus Antoninus in particular defpifed all the ftories of them, under the notion of their being mere fables. His words are, " I have " learnt not to believe those things which are re-" ported concerning wonder-workers, or jugglers and " magicians, in relation to their charms, and expul-" fion * Somnia, terrores magicos, miracula, fagas, Nocturnos lemures, portentaque Theffala rides? Hox.

Digitized by Google

+ Vid. Tacit. Hift. 1. 1. c. 86. 8; l. 2. c. 1.

a Revelation from God.

" fion of demons, and the like "." The followers of Epicurus were under a neceffity of rejecting every history of miracles; because they denied a providence, and thought the gods did not interest themfelves in the affairs of mankind +. But this very reafoning shews, that they considered miracles as divine operations, and therefore were not disposed to deride the works themselves, had they been convinced that any such works had been truly performed.

The proof of revelation therefore from real and unfulpected miracles, was not improper to be propofed to the Heathen world: for it is one thing to fulpect or deny the truth of miracles; and quite another, when we allow their truth, to difpute their authority ‡. How well this evidence was adapted to the * Marc. Anton. 1. 1. § 6. Plutarch likewife (de Superstit. p. 171.) ranks γοητώαι and μαγέωι amongst the most ridiculous parts of Pagan superstition. Θαύματα μώςοις, might well grow into a proverb, with respect to such miracles; which were fit only to produce the scorn and aversion which Horace expresses,

Aut in avem Progne vertatur, Cadmus in anguem. Quodeunque oftendis mihi fie, incredulus odi.

De Art. Poet. l. 187.

t It may here be objected, that those Heathens who believed a providence, ascribed miracles to demons. But it will not follow from hence, that they believed that demons wrought miracles in opposition to heaven, and in confirmation of falsehood. Πώντη ἄφα άψευδές το δαιμόνιδντε κζ το βείον. Plat. de Repub. 1. 2. p. 431. ed. Ficini. Should any ask, How came it the ftate of the Heathens, appears from its great fuccefs, in converting them from atheifm and idolatry to the Christian faith. And this fuccefs would have been still greater, had there been no more objection to the doctrine, than there was to the miracles of Christianity: for these works immediately difgraced all the artifices of imposture *, and bore upon themfelves fuch characters of divinity, that the Heathens regarded the performers of them as gods, and were with difficulty restrained from paying them divine honours †. From what has been advanced under this head, it in fome measure appears, that,

. to

III. Miracles form the moft eafy and compendious proof of a new revelation; fuch as lies level to the capacities of all mankind, even of those who have little leifure or ability for deep researches after truth. That the bulk of mankind are not endowed with faculties to apprehend the force of long and intricate reafonings; and that the neceffary duties of their station engrofs almost all their attention; are facts too plain to be disputed. And to those who are at all acquainted with the writings of the learned, it is as evident, that those abstract reasonings which are above the capacity of the vulgar, are often unfatisfactory to perfons to país that the Heathens did not pay more regard to the miracles of Christianity? I would refer them for fatisfaction to Dr. Law's "Confiderations," &c. p. 121. note e. 3d ed. who treats this fubject with his ufual candour and judgment.

- * See Acts viii. 9-24. ch. xiii. 8-11. ch. xix. 19.
- + Acts xiv. 11-13.

a Revelation from God.

perfons of judgment; and may generally be oppofed by arguments fo probable, as to cause perfons of the best abilities to doubt on which fide truth is to be found. The fpeculations which have had the fanction of one age, have been exploded in the next; nay, those which have reigned absolute over all the cultivated parts of the world, for many ages together, are now funk into contempt. And the new opinions which are substituted in the room of the former exploded ones, may hereafter undergo the fame fate with them. For there is very little certainty in any fcience, (except mathematical,) any farther than the reasoning is grounded upon facts. God therefore intending the Christian revelation for the benefit of all, founded it upon an evidence adapted to the capacities of all; upon fuch facts as clearly demonstrated his own interposition and countenance; and exhibited to the very fenfes, as well as to the understandings of mankind, the doctrines they were defigned to attelt, the miracles being specimens or famples of those doctrines. This testimony which God bore to his Son, was equally fitted to convince the learned and illiterate; the force of it was eafily and immediately apprehended, by all who were willing to open their eyes, and fee the light. Had it been neceffary, that mankind should have been made philofophers, before they became Christians; how small; and how flow a progress would the Gospel have made; especially as it was to be published to those, who had the greatest need of supernatural affistance, whole understandings had been debaled by superstition and idolatry, and whofe minds were inflamed by prejudices

Aa

Digitized by Google

36ğ

370.

prejudices and bigotry, as well as undifciplined to thought and reflection, and employed about the cares of life? But the Gofpel, by being accompanied with a proof of its divinity, that was plain and eafy, and carried inftant conviction, did in a fhort time eftablifh itfelf in every part of the earth. This divine light, like that of the fun, enlightens every man without any diffinction, and in a moment darts its beams from one end of the world to the other.

IV. Miracles are a very powerful method of conviction, making a Grong impression upon the heart, at the fame time that they carry light to the underflanding. Such fenfible and unufual effects, pointing out the immediate hand of God in producing them, arrest the attention, rouse the mind from the Supine state into which it was funk, strike it with an awe of God, impress the conviction of his peculiar prefence, and carry with them an obligation to receive and obey the truths which they confirm. They add weight and energy to those truths, whose importance thus interests heaven in their behalf. Every one who confiders the wifdom and majefty of the divine Being, must be fensible, that no trivial occafion, that nothing but the execution of fome defign of the highest importance, can induce him in any inftance to fuspend his own laws, and produce events quite out of the fettled order of his government. Ι add, that miracles, when they are not related, but feen; and when they are performed in our prefence in a manner worthy of the Divinity; make a very peculiar impression; they must strike the mind much more powerfully, than any history (whatever credit

Digitized by Google

we

(I

res

ith nð

la.

ine

rh.

ms.

)n-

rt.

er.

int-

ing

the 211

iar

10.

he₹ im.

ery

di

:02.

ign

innts

1 but

nce ery

1ch

:dH ¥6 we give it) can do. So that in these circumstances, no mah can result their efficacy, without contracting a peculiar guilt, and incurring an high degree of the divine displeasure; which was accordingly denounced by Christ and his apostles, against such states the conviction of those mighty works, by which the Gospel was confirmed *.

V. Powerful as these means of conviction may be, they are not violent and compulsive; nor do they produce their full effect, in engaging men to receive and obey a new revelation, without the exercise of right dispositions of mind. Whatever some have suggested to the contrary, by miracles God appeals to our resfon, to judge whether they are operations of his power, and evidences of his will; and whether those at whole instance they are performed, are commiffioned to deliver it. And when the understanding is convinced, that the mission is divine, our compliance with the meffage is an act of the will. Miracles are the fame method of address to mankind, as the works of nature, confidered as the effects of God's power. and the fignifications of his will, which neither produce a full conviction without fome attention and reflection, nor obedience without a becoming reverence of God.

Miracles, it may be faid, neceffarily firike the mind with aftonifhment; but fo likewife do the wonders of nature, while they are new: and this, in either A a 2  $\cdot$  cafe.

* John xv. 24. Mat. xi. 21. ch. xii. 31, 32. Heb. vi. 4, &c. ch. x. 29.

Miracles, the proper Proofs of

cafe, (ufeful as it may prove to fome,) is of little use to those, who studiously divert their thoughts from the operations of the divine hand, and are only looking out for matter of cavil against them. Mirackes are no remedy for obfinacy; nor can the brighteft manifestations of the Divinity open those eyes which are wilfully closed. Signs of an extraordinary divine interpolition will attract the readiest regard from those, who have cultivated right sentiments towards God, and are previously prepared to obey his will. So that the evidence of miracles is not unfuitable to the nature of religion, as a reafonable and voluntary fervice : nor to the nature of man, as a moral agent : and at the fame time it is peculiarly adapted to gain those over to the faith of the Christian revelation. who are best disposed to comply with its defign *.

VI. The necessary of miracles is no lefs evident, than their propriety and advantage, in attesting a divine commission, and propagating a new revelation. For how can God give any evidence of his will, but by the operations of his power, or the efffects of his omniscience? By what but the outward and feasible displays of both, can be bear a public testimony to an extraordinary messenger from heaven? The general laws of nature and providence answer the end for which they were designed; but eannot cannot ferve the purpole of a peculiar atteftation to a prophet of God. Nor can the excellent tendency of the doctrine, feparately confidered, prove that it came from God. Had Christianity been only a republication of the law of nature, or a revival of certain principles obfcured by fuperstition, but demonstrable by reason, when awakened into exercise : even then miracles would have been u/eful to excite the attention of the world to those principles, and to give them new evidence and certainty; nay, necessary, though not to establish their truth, yet to prove a particular divine commission, to revive the knowlege of them, and thereby to give the publishers of them the greater authority to reform the world, and procure them a more fpeedy fuccels. But when a new religion is (like that of the Gofpel) the free refult of the divine wildom for the falvation of finful men, and contains brighter difplays of the divine philanthropy, than natural reason is acquainted with; how can the divine original of fuch a new religion be established, if no fupernatural testimony be borne to it by God?

* This account of miracles is confirmed, by the effects which those of the Gospel produced. Some rejected this evidence, others were convinced, but not lastingly reformed by it, (Mat. vii. 22, 23.) on others it had a perfect and permanent influence; according to their respective dispositions.

The more immediate defign of the miracles of the Golpel, was, to prove the divine commission of the first publishers of it, and to engage men to receive it as an immediate meffage from God. They were more especially intended to demonstrate Jesus of Nazareth to be the Meffiah, the divinely appointed prince and favioper: a claim that could not be supported, but by the divine testimony of prophecies and miracles. Christ not only assumed the honour of a prophet of God, but a far superior dignity and authority to any of the prophets; he spoke of him-A a 3 felf

374

felf as the Son of God, in a fense peculiar and tranfcendent; as one appointed to govern the church, and to judge the world. Now, the more extraordinary his claims were, fo much the more neceffary was it to confirm them by adequate miracles. Had Christ reasoned like a philosopher, he might have been effeemed as fuch; but, without producing proper credentials of a divine miffion * and authority, he could not have enforced his inftructions upon the confcience. as the immediate dictates and oracles of the Divinity; nor have been received by the world under his proper character, as the Son of God, the Saviour, Sovereign, and Judge of mankind. Chrift had fuffered death, as a malefactor. His apoftles affirmed, that God had raifed him up again, advanced him to a state of the highest dignity and authority in his prefence and kingdom, and invested him with power to beltow immortality on his followers. But. who ought or could give credit to their doctrine and testimony, if it had not been confirmed by God himfelf, on whole good pleafure alone the conftitution of the Gofpel was founded? It was impoffible by reafon, to prove the antecedent propriety and neceffity of fuch a constitution. If any thing can render the neceflity of miracles to confirm and propagate the Gospel, still more apparent; it is the confideration of the

* This argument might receive large illustration from the cafe of Moses, both as a divine ambassiador to Pharaoh, and a divine legislator to the Israelites. Even his main doctrine, viz. that the God of the Hebrews was the only true God, as well as his commission, could be established only by miracles.

the great corruption * of the world, at the time of Chrift's appearance in it, creating in men a difaffection to the purity of this new revelation; the difgrace and danger that attended the public profeffion of it; the violent prejudices entertained both by Jews and Gentiles against the doctrine of the crofs; the Gofpel's fuperfeding the neceffity of the Jewish revelation, and establishing itself upon the ruins of Pagan idolatry; and the confequent opposition it met with from all the powers of the world. These difficulties and obstructions could not have been furmounted, if the Gospel had not been supported and recommended by the most unquestionable operations of God's power, and the plainest testimonies of his approbation.

VII. Miracles, while they are more immediately and directly employed in introducing and eftablifhing a new revelation, may ferve to revive and confirm the principles of natural religion, and to recover men from those two opposite extremes of atheifm and idolatry. Into the one or other of these extremes, the world was very generally fallen, in the age of the Gospel. Perfons in the higher ranks of life, were infected with atheifm; those in the lower, were quite  $\dot{A} = 4$  over-run

* See what was urged above, to fhew the neceffity of confirming the Gofpel by miracles, and of confidering thefe works as in themfelves certain evidences of a divine interpolition, from the confideration of the ftrong prejudices both of Jews and Gentiles against the claims of Christ, and from the great corruption of the age in which the Gospel was published, ch. 3. fect. 6.

Digitized by Google

375

over run with idolatry. Now, no properer cure of both these evils could be prescribed, than miracles.

1. These works confute the pretences of atheifm, and afford new evidence of those first principles of all religion, the being and providence of God. It has, indeed, been often affirmed, that miracles offered in fupport of a miffion from God, do only fuppofe, and cannot demonstrate, his existence. Nevertheles, if they are his immediate acts, and prove a divine miffion; they must prove that there is a God, from whom the millionary comes, and by whole authority he acts. Supernatural figns and wonders demonstrate his existence, in the same way of reasoning as the works of nature do. In both cafes we proceed on one common principle, that every effect must have fome cause; and argue from the visible effects, to an invisible caufe, by which they were produced. If you confider only the grandeur of the works, the existence of the world (fo replete with wonders!) bears a more ample testimony to the being of a God, than all the miracles of the Jewish and Christian dispensations. Neverthelefs, occasional and uncommon operations of the divine power have this peculiar advantage to recommend them, that they strike our attention more forcibly, than that fettled course of things, which falls under our constant observation.

Miracles not only contain a new demonstration of God's existence, but strengthen the proofs of it drawn from the frame of the world, and clear them from the two principal objections of atheism, viz. either that the world is eternal, or else owed its existence to the fortuitous concourse of atoms. Sometimes the the atheist affirms, that the world was never made at all, but has existed from eternity just as it is at prefent; and is fubject to fate or necessity: and thus he endeavours to evade the argument drawn from nature, to prove the existence of its Creator and Lord. But the supernatural proof of this important point is not liable to the fame objection, and is even ferviceable in removing it. No one affirms, that miracles existed from eternity; and if they are really effected, they must have a cause. If they are effected at the intercession of a prophet, and in attestation of his commission, they must have a voluntary defigning cause; and cannot be ascribed either to necessity or fate. And inafmuch as they controul or fuperfede the laws of nature; their efficient cause must be diftinct from nature, and superior to it; and can be no other than the fovereign Lord of nature, the fame whom we call God. Not to add, that had the world been eternal, the course of nature would have continued the fame without any interruption. Nor can visible figns of an invisible power that commands nature, be any more reconciled with the formation of the world by the fortuitous concourse of atoms, than with the notion of its eternal necessary existence. In opposition to both these pleas, they prove the world to be the work of a free and almighty Agent *. For who can controul the fettled courfe of nature, but that

* So that whether the apoftle confidered the declarations of Moles, Gen. i. r. as that of a prophet, or the credentials of his million; he might fay, "By faith we know that the worlds were framed by the word of God," Heb. xi. 3. Faith fupplies us with new evidence of this truth, without weakening that that great Being that established it? If the world had no creator, it could have no lord. He alone who caused it to be what it is, could make what changes in it he pleased. The visible signs of God's power do so clearly demonstrate his existence, that the athesist denies there ever were any miracles, to avoid being compelled into the belief of a God.

Miracles, the proper Proofs of

378

Miracles also bear a noble testimony to divine providence. They are actual exercises of God's jurifdiction over the world, and therefore a proof of fact that he governs it, and interests himself in its affairs. Prophecies likewife are a farther illustration and evidence of this important truth. When they describe the most contingent events, the actions of free agents; comprehend the fates of various nations and perfons; and reach through a great length of ages; they afford a most fensible proof of the universal and perpetual fuperintendency of an unerring providence. These miraculous effects of the divine power and knowlege, are a very valuable addition to that evidence of God's existence and government, which arifes from the order of nature; and ferve to vindicate and confirm it.

2. Miracles are a remedy against the evil of *idol*atry, as well as that of atheism. In the opinion of idolaters themselves, these works are a demonstration of a divine power *. And when they are performed that of reafon. And Mofes might clearly and certainly infer from his miracles, even without an immediate revelation, that, " In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."

* Acts xiv. 11.

formed in the name of Jehovah, under the character of the only living and true God, in direct opposition to all the claims of idolatry; they equally establish the divinity of Jehovah, and confute the pretensions of all his rivals and opposers. The truth of his claims necessfarily infers the falsehood of theirs. Miracles, being in themselves exercises of God's fovereign dominion over the powers of nature, which were the principal gods of Paganism, and from whom the inferior deities were supposed to derive all their authority; overturn the very foundation of the Pagan idolatry, and bring men to the knowlege of the true God *. This

* 1 Theff. i. 9, 10. 1 Pet. i. 21. 1 Cor. xii. 2. Ads siv. 15. Mr. Voltaire (in his Dictionaire Philosophique, p. 268.) feems to approve of the philosopher, who faid, that the fight of miracles would convince him of the existence of two opposite principles, one of whom undoes what the other had been doing. This objection proceeds on the falle suppofition, that miracles contradict or defeat the intention of the laws of nature : whereas they only aim at an end, which could not be answered by the regular operation of those laws; (as was shewn above, p. 21.) And it is evident, that, when they are performed in the name of the true God, and in proof of his fole dominion over nature, or (which is the fame thing in effect) in proof of a million from him, under the character of the fole author and fovereign of the world, and are not (as they never can be) controuled by opposite miracles; instead of establishing, they directly confute the doctrine of two or more rival deities. Accordingly, the miracles of the Jewish and Christian revelations were the means of converting men from polytheism, to the faith and worship of the true God. " By him (Chrift) ye believe in God, that taifed him from " the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith and hope " might be in God." I Pet. i. 21.

Miracles, the proper Proofs of

This argument might receive large illustration from the peculiar nature of the Scripture miracles, were this the proper place for entering on the examination of them. But we are here only fhewing the use of miracles in general, in bearing testimony to the existence, unity, and providence of God; and confidering these works in their most general view, as divine operations.

For this reason, we forbear likewise to shew, that when miracles are in their own nature, displays of the beneficence and rectitude of the divine Being, instances of his favour or displeasure, according to mens different characters; and are likewife fubfervient to a fcheme calculated to recover men to piety and virtue; they are then a new confirmation of God's moral perfections and providence, fuch as may ferve for the conviction of all who call them into queftion, and be of fingular use to those who worfhip gods of the most flagitious characters, and do it by acts of wickedness fuitable to their apprehended natures. Thus the antient Heathens did; who neverthelefs were recovered by fuch miracles as are here described, to the knowledge and adoration of the Holy One of Ifrael.

The foregoing obfervations are, I hope, fufficient to fhew, that how low an opinion foever those may entertain of miracles, who will not allow them to be the immediate operation of God; yet when confidered in this their true light, their use, importance, and neceffity in introducing and establishing a new revelation, is clearly discerned; and that, while they give authority to a prophet to reveal the divine will to mankind, mankind, they bear a striking testimony to the existence and providence of God, and are highly useful, if not necessary, for the conviction of mankind, when sunk into atheism and idolatry. They have actually answered this end, when all the works of nature failed of their effect. I would only observe farther,

380

VIII. That the evidence of miracles (whether of power or knowlege) is the fittest to accompany a standing revelation; because it is not confined to one age or nation, but may be extended over the whole globe, and conveyed to the most distant generations. Miracles of power carry inftant conviction, procure present credit to a prophet; and must make a very peculiar impression on the spectators. Nevertheles, their use is not confined to them; for they may be fo credible in themfelves, fo ftrongly attefted, fo faithfully recorded, and fo neceffarily connected with other subsequent facts, not to be disputed, nor accounted for in a natural way, as to leave no room for those to doubt of their reality, who had not the advantage of feeing them performed. With respect to miracles of knowledge; they ferve in fome inftances for immediate use, particularly the discoveries of distant and hidden transactions, and of the fecrets of the human heart. There are other inftances of fupernatural knowlege, the predictions of future events, which are defigned to carry conviction in fome diftant period. The distances between the delivery of the prophecies and their accomplishment may be very different: some prophecies may receive a speedy completion; others may be gradually accomplifying through many fucceeding ages, to the very end of time;

ź81

Miracles, the proper Proofs of, Sc.

time; and hereby furnish evidence to the world through all these different periods. Such prophecies are a standing and perpetual evidence of the mission of a prophet; always lying open to the view and examination of the world. They give credibility to the history of his other miracles, being themselves one species of miracles, such as necessarily argue a special divine interposition. And the evidence arifing from them, instead of being diminished, will be increased by their distance from the time of their delivery, as the events foretold fuccessively happen.

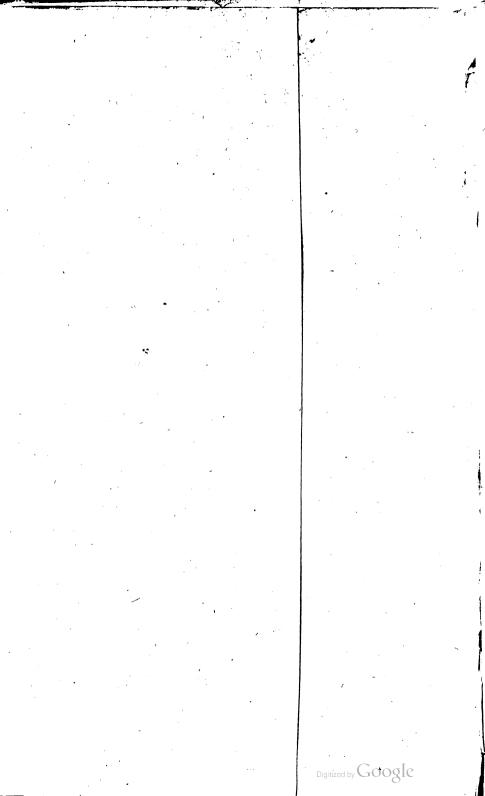

From the whole of what has been offered, in this and the feveral foregoing chapters, it appears, I hope, that it can be no objection against the Jewish and Christian revelations, that they rest upon the basis of miracles.

THE END.

PRESERVATION SERVICE

SHELFMARK 4226. CC. 17

